cer before the judicial determination of the right.¹ But where the government voluntarily or under a mistake of law pays disputed fees prior to a decision upon the merits, it cannot recover them back or counterclaim them in an action by the officer for other fees.²

Right to Set-off. — A disbursing officer, when sued for a balance in his hands, may set off a claim for extra services unless the government can show some law establishing the illegality of the claim.³ But when the government pleads set-off in an action for salary, the burden is on it to prove the set-off, and not on the petitioner to disprove it.⁴ The right of a de jure officer to recover from a de facto officer a sum paid to the latter while in office is elsewhere discussed.⁵

XIV. DURATION OF THE OFFICER'S AUTHORITY — 1. "Term" Defined. — As the word "term" used with reference to the tenure of office will be frequently used in this section, a clear definition of the word is essential to an understanding of what is said. Used in this sense the word designates a fixed and definite period of time.⁶ It does not, therefore, apply to the period of service of an officer who is removable at the pleasure of some other officer, and who must be removed on the occurrence of an uncertain event;⁷ nor does it apply to the duration of service of an officer who resigns or vacates his office before the expiration of the fixed period for which he is entitled to serve.⁸

2. Duration of Authority in General — a. ANCIENT USAGE. — In England the tenure of ancient common-law offices depends, in a great measure, upon ancient usage.⁹ But in the United States there is no ancient usage which can apply to and govern the tenure of offices created by the Federal Constitution and statutes, or by the constitutions and statutes of the several states. The tenure of such offices depends upon a just construction of the constitution and laws under which they exist.¹⁰ The like doctrine is held in England where the office is not an ancient common-law office, but of modern origin, under some act of Parliament.¹¹

b. POWER TO FIX OR CHANGE DURATION — AUTHORITY OF LEGISLATURE — (1) In General. — Acting within constitutional limitations the legislature of a state has power to fix, limit, or alter the term of a public office,¹² or

The Delegation of Authority to Appoint a subordinate officer, if the duration of his term is not fixed, confers upon the appointing power the authority to fix such term.³

(2) Power to Abridge the Term of an Incumbent. — It is within the power of the legislature, in the absence of constitutional restriction, to shorten the term of a public office, even though the term of the person in office is thereby shortened, or to abolish the office during the term of an incumbent, or to declare the same vacant.⁴ The exercise of such power by the legislature does not violate the constitutional inhibitions against passing any law impairing the obligation of a contract,⁵ or depriving any person of property without due process of law,⁶ for a public office is not the property of the incumbent, nor does the incumbent hold by grant or contract.⁷

(3) Conclusiveness of Statutory Term. — Where the term of a public office is fixed by statute, the appointing power cannot, in making the appointment, abridge the term so fixed.⁸ If a person is appointed for a shorter period than that prescribed, the appointment is valid for the full statutory period.¹ So where the term of an elective office is fixed by statute, neither the occupant of the office, except by death or resignation, the election officers, nor the electors can shorten or lengthen such term.²

(4) Constitutional Limitations — (a) Term Fixed by Constitution — aa. RULE STATED. — In the United States the terms of certain state officers are not infrequently fixed by the state constitutions. Where this is the case the legislature cannot extend or abridge the term so fixed, either directly or indirectly.³

bb. ABOLITION OF OFFICES IN CREATION OF NEW POLITICAL ORGANIZATIONS. — But the legislature when authorized to create new political organizations as counties, cities, and incorporated villages, may abolish old organizations, as by the creation of two counties out of an existing county, or by the creation of a city from territory previously existing under some other form of government, although the effect is to abolish offices existing under the old political organizations whose terms were fixed by the constitution, and this is so though such offices are abolished during the terms of the existing incumbents thereof.⁴

cc. ABRIDGMENT OF TERM BY CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT OR BY NEW CONSTITUTION. — But though a term of office fixed by the constitution cannot be changed by the legislature it may be abridged by an amendment to the constitution or by a new constitution.⁵

Rule Where the Existing Political Organizations Are Not Abolished or Changed. — But where a town is transferred from one county to another, or a new county created from definite subsisting towns in an existing county, without in either case changing the names or territorial limits of the towns, the legislature cannot abridge the term of office for which officers of such towns had been appointed, where such terms had been fixed by the constitution. *People v. definite period of time, the legislature cannot fix a term extending over a longer period.¹ But a constitutional provision declaring that no term of office shall exceed a certain prescribed time does not apply to an office the term of which continues during the pleasure of the appointing power.²

bb. TERM LIMITED TO PERIOD FOR WHICH OFFICER WAS ELECTED OR APPOINTED. — The constitutions of some of the states provide that the terms of officers, or of certain officers, shall not be extended for a longer period than that for which they were elected or appointed.³ Such a provision is not violated by a statute making such reasonable changes in the times for electing such officers as the public interest may require, although an incidental result thereof is to extend the time of the present incumbents of the offices,⁴ nor is it violated by a statute the object of which is not to extend but to fix the commencement of a term of office,⁵ nor by an act abolishing an office of legislative creation before the end of the term of the present incumbent thereof.⁶

(c) Legislature Cannot Extend Term of Officer Elected under Constitution — aa. RULE STATED. Where the constitution directs that certain officers shall be elected by the people, and authorizes the legislature to fix the term of office and the time and manner of election, and the legislature has exercised the authority conferred, and in pursuance of its enactment an officer has been elected, a subsequent act extending his term beyond the period fixed is unconstitutional.⁷

bb. REASONABLE CHANGES IN TIMES FOR HOLDING ELECTIONS PERMISSIBLE. — But it has been held that a statute making reasonable changes in the times for holding elections to fill certain offices, though incidentally it results in extending the terms of the present incumbents of such offices, does not violate a constitutional provision making the offices elective, provided the terms of the present incumbents are not extended for so long a period as to raise the presumption of a design substantially to deprive the offices of their elective character.⁸

ment, or during his term of office, does not preclude the legislature from abolishing an office before the end of the term of the present incumbent thereof.¹

(e) Extent of Invalidity of Statutes Attempting to Alter Constitutional Term. — Where the term of an office is definitely fixed by the constitution, a statute which attempts to enlarge or abridge the term so fixed is not necessarily wholly void, but only so in so far as it attempts to change the constitutional term, and officers elected or appointed under its provisions will be entitled to serve for the period fixed by the constitution.² But where the constitution does not fix but merely limits the term, there is some conflict of authority upon the question whether a statute which attempts to extend it beyond the period limited is wholly or only partially void.³

(f) Peculiar Provisions of Constitutional Limitations Construed. — Certain peculiar provisions found in the constitutions of some of the states, limiting the power of the legislature to fix or change the terms of the public officers, have received the interpretation of the courts.⁴

c. INTERPRETATION OF LAWS FIXING OR REGULATING DURATION OF AUTHORITY — (1) In General. — Where the tenure of an office is regulated by constitutional or statutory provision the duration of the authority of an incumbent thereof is to be determined by the meaning and intention of the enactment.⁵ Generally public officers are authorized to serve for a fixed and definite period of time, as for a year,⁶ or a certain number of years,⁷ or during the term of the officer by whom they are appointed.⁸ Sometimes the term of an office is for life⁹ or during good behavior.¹⁰ But not infrequently, first incumbent thereof, it will be presumed to be the intention of the law-making power that the period so fixed shall be the term of the office generally.¹

(4) Provision for Annual Appointment. — Generally, where a statute provides that an officer shall be appointed annually, an appointment made in pursuance thereof will entitle the appointee to hold for one year.²

(5) Reference to Former Statute in Creation of Office. — Where an office is created and its term fixed by statute, and subsequently the legislature abolishes the office and creates an office of a similar character, without making provision as to its term, and refers to the former act for the ascertainment of the duties and emoluments of the incumbent, the former statute will govern also as to the term of the office.³

(6) Statute Altering Term Presumed to Be Prospective. — A statute enlarging or abridging the term of an existing office is presumed to be purely prospective and does not apply to the term of the present incumbent of the office unless the intention to extend or abridge his term is clearly made manifest by the language used.⁴

d. DURATION OF AUTHORITY WHEN TENURE IS NOT FIXED. — All offices, the tenure of which is not fixed by constitutional or statutory provision, are held at the will and discretion of some department of the government, usually the appointing power, and the incumbents are subject to removal at pleasure, unless a different tenure is expressed in the appointment, or is implied by the nature of the office, or results from ancient usage.⁵

Under Express Constitutional Provisions in Some States, if the term of any officer is not fixed by law, such officer is entitled to hold his position during the pleasure of the authority making the appointment.⁶ Such a provision has been held to apply only when the power of appointment is continuous.⁷

3. When Authority Commences — a. WHEN DATE IS FIXED BY LAW. — The date upon which a public officer shall commence his term of office is generally fixed by statute or constitutional provision, such a period of time being usually allowed to intervene between the date of election or appointment and the commencement of the term as will permit the officer to qualify in the required manner.⁸ Sometimes, however, it is provided that the term shall commence from the time of election or appointment.¹ It is within the power of the legislature so to fix the commencement of the term in the absence of a constitutional provision to the contrary.² But where the constitution fixes a certain time for the commencement of a term, the legislature cannot fix a different time for its commencement.³ Nor, where the constitution has limited the length of the term, can the legislature fix a date for its commencement that will have the effect of making it longer or shorter than the period prescribed.⁴

Time of Taking Possession Does Not Affect Date of Commencement. — Where the date upon which a term of office shall commence is fixed by constitution or statute, the term of a person elected thereto will commence on that date, although he does not take possession of the office until a time subsequent thereto.⁵

Where It Is Provided that the Term Shall Run from a Certain Date the day of date is excluded.⁶

(2) When Officer Authorized to Appoint Incumbent with Consent of Another Officer or Official Body. — Where it is provided that one officer may, with the consent or approval of another officer or official body, fill an office by appointment, the concurrent action of both is essential to a regular appointment.¹ Therefore, if in such a case no time is fixed for the commencement of the term of the office, it will begin to run only after an appointment by the one officer and its sanction by the other officer or official body.²

4. When Authority Ends — a. WHEN TERM IS DEFINITELY FIXED OR LIMITED BY LAW — (1) General Rule. — Where the term of an office has been definitely fixed or limited by law, the official authority of a person elected or appointed for such term ceases upon the expiration thereof,³ and this no matter at what time in such term he commenced service,⁴ and he is entitled to hold until the end of the term although he took possession of the office, and discharged its duties, before the commencement thereof.⁵

(2) Right to Hold Over — (a) In Absence of Any Express Provision — aa. IN GENERAL. — In some jurisdictions this rule has been held to apply even where the proper authorities have failed to appoint or elect a successor to the incumbent before the expiration of his term, it being held that in such case he cannot hold over, unless expressly authorized to do so.⁶ But the better doctrine, and the one supported by a preponderance of authority, is that officers are entitled under such circumstances to hold over until their successors are elected or appointed and have qualified, unless some restrictive words are used expressly or impliedly prohibiting such holding over.¹ In some jurisdictions, however, this doctrine would seem to apply only to officers of municipalities or other public corporations² or to officers whose duties consist in the safekeeping and current management of public property.³ In some states it does not apply to judges.⁴

bb. WHERE OFFICE IS TO BE FILLED ANNUALLY OR AT STATED PERIODS. — The authorities are almost unanimous in holding that if a constitution or statute, without expressly fixing the term of an office, merely provides that an election shall be had or an appointment made annually or at stated periods, a person so elected or appointed is entitled to hold until his successor is elected or appointed and qualified.⁵ But where it is provided that officers shall be elected "for one year only," they cannot hold over beyond the end of the year,⁶ and it has been held that where the charter of a public corporation provides that its officers shall be elected annually on a particular day, officers so elected cannot hold over beyond the next election day thereafter.⁷

(b) Under Constitutional and Statutory Provisions — aa. IN GENERAL. — The question of the right to hold over in the absence of any provision of the law on the subject is not of much practical importance, as constitutional provisions and statutes relating to public offices almost universally provide that the incumbents shall hold over until their successors are elected or appointed and qualified. Under such a provision, the office does not become vacant upon the expiration of the term, if there is then no successor elected or appointed and qualified to assume it, but the rights and duties of the incumbent continue until his successor has been elected or appointed and has properly qualified,⁸ and this is so even where the commencement of such successor's

The Policy of Provisions of This Character is to prevent the happening of vacancies in office, except by death, resignation, removal, and the like.¹

The Holding Over Is Not a New Term, but simply a prolongation of the old term.² Therefore an officer is entitled to hold over, although he is ineligible, under the constitution, for a second term.³

The Word "Elected," as used in provisions of this nature, signifies an election of a qualified successor to the incumbent by the same electoral body as that to which the incumbent owes his election, or which by law is entitled to elect his successor;⁴ and this whether such body be the electoral body at large, or the legislature, or some other organized body.⁵

Some of the Peculiar Provisions of laws authorizing incumbents of offices to hold over until their successors are elected or appointed and qualified have received the interpretation of the courts.⁶

bb. AUTHORITY OF LEGISLATURE — CONSTITUTIONAL LIMITATIONS. — It is entirely competent for the legislature of a state to authorize public officers to hold over in the absence of any constitutional provision to the contrary.⁷ But it is the better opinion, and the one supported by the greater weight of authority, that when the constitution fixes the term of an office or limits it to a prescribed period of time, the legislature cannot, by authorizing the incumbent to hold until his successor is elected or appointed and qualified, extend his authority over a longer period than that prescribed.⁸

Authority to Exercise Power until Other Officers Are "Elected" means elected and qualified. Where a statute provides that certain officers shall exercise certain powers until certain other officers are "elected," the former officers are entitled to exercise such powers until the latter are elected and qualified, since until then the latter are not authorized to act, and the legislature will not be deemed to have intended an hiatus in the exercise of the powers granted. *Wells v. A Constitutional Requirement that Officers Shall Be Elected for a Limited Period of Time was held to prevent an officer's holding over after the next general election for a further period

cc. EFFECT OF DEATH OF PERSON ELECTED AS SUCCESSOR — (aa) Before Qualification. — Where the law provides that the incumbent of an office shall hold over until his successor is elected and qualified, and a person duly elected as such successor dies before he has qualified, the office does not become vacant, but the incumbent is entitled to hold over, as one of the contingencies upon which his term is to expire has not taken place, namely, the qualification of a successor.¹

(bb) After Qualification but Before Commencement of Term. — But the incumbent's right to hold over ceases upon the election and qualification of his successor, and it is not revived by the subsequent death of such successor before the commencement of his term.²

dd. EFFECT OF JUDGMENT DECLARING OFFICE FORFEITED. — Hold-over provisions apply only to such officers as have filled out the full term. They do not apply to an officer who has been adjudged to have forfeited his office by the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction.³

ee. EFFECT OF RESIGNATION OF INCUMBENT. — But where the constitution or statutes provide that officers shall hold their offices until others are elected or appointed in their places and are qualified, it has been held that they continue in office, notwithstanding the tender to and acceptance by the proper authority of their resignations, until the election or appointment and qualification of their successors.⁴ The rule is otherwise, however, where it is expressly provided that an officer's resignation shall take effect from the time of filing the same.⁵ And in some jurisdictions it has been held that where the law declares an office vacant on the resignation of the incumbent, the authority and duties of an incumbent cease upon his resignation, notwithstanding a statute providing that the officer shall continue to discharge the duties of his office until a successor has qualified.⁶

ff. PRECLUSION OF VACANCY BY A HOLDING OVER. — As there is no vacancy in an office where the incumbent is holding over beyond the usual time under a constitutional or statutory provision authorizing him to do so, in the absence of a provision creating a vacancy in such case,⁷ it follows that in such case the office cannot be filled by election or appointment under an authority so to fill a vacancy occurring therein.⁸ But it would seem that where the law

But a constitutional provision that the legislature may not create an office the tenure of which shall be longer than a specified number of years, has been held not to prevent the incumbent of an office at the expiration of such period from holding over in accordance with another constitutional provision until he is superseded by a qualified successor. *State v. expressly or impliedly creates a vacancy in an office at the expiration of the regular term, the office may be filled by election or appointment under an authority so to fill a vacancy therein, although the incumbent is authorized to hold over.¹

Effect of Surrender of Office by Incumbent. — Where an incumbent authorized to hold over surrenders the office upon the apparent election and qualification of a successor a subsequent judgment declaring such election void, on the ground of the candidate's ineligibility, creates a vacancy in the office which may be filled by appointment under an authority so to fill such a vacancy. The hold-over provision has no application in such a case.²

gg. INCUMBENT CANNOT BENEFIT BY HIS OWN WRONG OR NEGLIGENCE. — As the purpose of a hold-over provision is to conserve the public interests by preventing vacancies in office,³ and as it is never designed to extend the tenure of office of an incumbent for his own benefit beyond the specified term, it follows that a person re-elected to an office as his own successor cannot, by his neglect to qualify, prolong his prior term, and so, to his own advantage, postpone the beginning of the term for which he was re-elected.⁴ Nor can the incumbent prolong his term by preventing the person legally entitled to the office from qualifying, as by unlawfully detaining his certificate and commission.⁵ Nor can the incumbent hold over if the failure to elect his successor results from his, the incumbent's, own inadvertence in not giving notice of the election as he is required to do.⁶

(3) Estoppel to Deny that Term Has Expired. — A person who has taken possession of an office in pursuance of his election thereto, and has served for the full period fixed by law as the term of such office, is, as against his regularly elected and properly qualified successor, estopped from denying that his term of office has expired.⁷ So, if an officer elected for a second term executes and delivers his bond for such term, he thereby relinquishes all right or claim to hold the office, after the expiration of the first term, by virtue of his first election.¹

b. WHEN TENURE IS AT PLEASURE OF SUPERIOR OFFICER OR OFFICIAL BODY. — Where an officer holds at the pleasure of some superior officer or official body his holding is, of course, terminable at the will of that officer or body.² So the authority of an officer who holds at the pleasure of the appointing power ceases when the office held by the appointing power is abolished or ceases to exist,³ or when the law vesting the power of appointment is repealed, and such power is conferred upon another officer or body.⁴ But where a board of officers has the power of appointing certain officers to hold office during the pleasure of the board, the tenure of an appointee is unaffected by changes in the personnel of the board.⁵

c. TENURE OF PERSONS ELECTED OR APPOINTED TO FILL VACANCIES — (1) In Absence of Express Provision — (a) Where Term of Office and Its Commencement and Termination Are Fixed. — Where the time of the commencement and termination of the term of an office, as well as its duration, are definitely fixed by constitutional or statutory enactment, and provision is made for filling vacancies therein by appointment or election, but without any provision as to the duration of authority of a person so appointed or elected, such person is entitled to serve for the remainder of the unexpired term.⁶

(b) Where Term Is Fixed but Not Its Commencement or Termination. — But where the term of an elective office is fixed by constitution or statute, but without any time being established for its beginning or ending, a person elected to the office will be entitled to hold for the period established as the full term thereof, whether he was elected upon the happening of a casual vacancy or at the expiration of a complete term.⁷ The same rule applies where the office is an appointive one and no express provision is made for filling vacancies,⁸ or where provision is made for filling vacancies by appointment, but without fixing the duration of authority of persons so appointed.⁹

(2) Under Express Constitutional and Statutory Provisions — (a) In General. — Usually constitutional and statutory provisions, relating to the filling of vacancies in public offices, fix by express terms the duration of authority of persons elected or appointed to fill such vacancies.

(b) Power of Legislature — aa. IN ABSENCE OF CONSTITUTIONAL RESTRICTION. — In the absence of constitutional restriction it is entirely competent for the legislature of a state to make provision as to when the term of an incumbent, elected or appointed to fill a vacancy, shall expire.¹

bb. WHEN TERM OF ELECTIVE OFFICE IS FIXED BY CONSTITUTION. — Where the term of an elective office is fixed by the constitution at a certain definite period of time, without any provision being made thereby as to when such term shall begin or end, it has been held that the legislature cannot authorize a person elected to fill a casual vacancy in the office to hold for a period less than that prescribed.² But upon this point the authorities are not entirely harmonious, for there is strong authority for the proposition that the legislature may, notwithstanding the term of an office is thus fixed by the constitution, in the case of a vacancy or in an exceptional case, such as the organization of a new county, provide for the election or appointment of a person to fill the office until the time when the next regular term, as established by the legislature, commences.³ But whatever the right doctrine on this point may be, it seems to be well settled that the legislature may in such a case authorize the appointment of a person to fill the vacancy until the next election at which the office may be filled.⁴

(c) Construction of Provisions. — The provisions of law relating to the duration of authority of persons elected or appointed to fill vacancies are as varied as they are numerous. Many of the cases are collected and indicated in the notes.⁵

term,¹ and even though the constitution provides that such officers shall hold their offices for the term for which they were elected.² Likewise a municipality, having the power to create an office, in the absence of legislative restraint, may abolish it.³ Though the tenure and compensation are fixed by statute, the legislature cannot abolish an office of constitutional origin by a colorable reduction of the compensation or by taking it away altogether.⁴

2. Resignation and Surrender — *a. affirmed.¹ The acceptance of a resignation so obtained cannot be justified on the ground that the officer would in any event have been removed for neglect of duty.²

b. FORM AND REQUISITES OF RESIGNATION. — In the absence of statute no particular form is required to effect a resignation,³ and it may be either express or by implication.⁴ It may be made to take effect at a future day.⁵ When a statute prescribes the steps to be taken they must be followed in all respects.⁶ Unless required by statute, neither writing⁷ nor seal is essential to a resignation in the United States.⁸ In England it is held that when an officer is appointed by an instrument under seal a similar instrument is necessary to effect a sufficient resignation.⁹ If the office is elective, no writing is necessary.¹⁰ To constitute a complete and operative resignation there must be an intention to relinquish the office,¹¹ but the intention alone is ineffective unless manifested by the conveyance of the resignation to the person authorized to receive it and who has power to fill the vacancy.¹²

c. PERSONS AND BODIES AUTHORIZED TO ACT UPON RESIGNATION. — A general right to accept a resignation passes incidentally with the right to appoint or elect;¹³ and every municipal corporation has an incidental power of accepting the resignation of its officers.¹⁴ The general rule is that in the absence of an express statutory enactment as to the matter, a resignation should be tendered to the appointing power¹⁵ or to the power having authority to call the election necessitated by the resignation.¹⁶ And the fact that the resignation is placed in the hands of another person or body, and is accepted by him or them, has no more effect than if it were retained in the hands of the officer himself.¹⁷ without the consent of competent authority no officer can divest himself of the performance of the duties of the office to which he was elected or appointed,¹ and in the United States this doctrine has been adopted in some jurisdictions,² but in other jurisdictions the common law on this subject has been held inapplicable to the incumbents of offices under the American form of government.³

Revocation. — The revocation, by the President, of the acceptance of an army officer's resignation, after due notice to the officer of such acceptance, does not restore the officer to the army.⁴

How Manifested. — A resignation may be accepted either in express words,⁵ or by the election or appointment of a successor,⁶ or the resignation may be impliedly accepted by receiving it without objection and filing or causing it to be filed.⁷ It follows from what has been said that the acceptance may be by parol.⁸

e. WHEN EFFECTIVE. — Where the resignation is worded to take effect at a future day it does not take effect until such day, no matter when it is accepted,⁹ but it has been held that this does not prevent the election of a successor before the day fixed for the taking effect of the resignation.¹⁰

the appointment of a successor, the resignation is not complete until such appointment.¹

f. WITHDRAWAL OF RESIGNATION. — An unconditional resignation to take effect immediately cannot be withdrawn even with the consent of the power authorized to accept it,² and it does not seem to be material that the resignation had not been accepted.³ A contingent⁴ or a prospective resignation, however, can be withdrawn at any time before it is accepted,⁵ and after it is accepted it seems that it may be withdrawn with the consent of the authority accepting where no rights have intervened.⁶

g. EFFECT AND INCIDENTS OF RESIGNATION. — A decree signed,⁷ or a finding of facts made in an appealed case, after the judge's resignation, is valid,⁸ but a judge has no power to allow a motion for a new trial after a resignation of his office has taken effect.⁹ It has been held that a resignation will not deprive the municipality¹⁰ or any other person of any right which the law may have conferred upon them in respect of such office or the political division represented by such officer.¹¹

h. SURRENDER. — The incumbency may be terminated also by the surrender of the office to the person appointed or elected successor to the incumbent, as by delivering the records of the office and permitting the office to be taken by the incumbent without objection.¹²

Office Not Abandoned. — Though the officer voluntarily surrender possession of the office before the expiration of his term to one who has been elected under a statute which is acted upon as valid, but which is afterwards declared unconstitutional and void, there is no such abandonment as will create a vacancy.¹³

3. Abandonment and Forfeiture — a. FAILURE TO QUALIFY OR TO MAINTAIN QUALIFICATIONS. — One of the modes of losing an office to which one has been appointed or elected is the failure to qualify therefor by giving the bond or taking the oath of office within the time and in the manner prescribed by law. But the decisions are not in accord as to when such forfeiture takes effect. to the filing of the bond and the taking of the oath are construed as directory merely, and that therefore such failure does not of itself effect a forfeiture, but is only cause of forfeiture¹ requiring a judicial declaration of a vacancy because of such omission.² In other jurisdictions such statutes are held to be mandatory so that the failure to strictly observe their requirements, of itself, works a forfeiture.³ A distinction has been made between a wilful refusal to qualify, and an omission due to no fault or negligence on the part of the officer; in the latter case the failure has been held not to work a forfeiture.⁴ The proposition last stated has been applied to renewal and additional bonds required to be filed by the officer.⁵ Refusal to give a bond required of an ex officio officer does not create a vacancy in the principal office.⁶

b. NONRESIDENCE. — In general a vacancy in office will also occur when the incumbent before the expiration of his term removes with the intention of permanently remaining away from the political division in and for which he was elected or appointed to perform the duties of the office;⁷ and a judicial determination is not necessary to establish the fact of such vacancy.¹ But the authorities are not uniform as to the effect of a removal from a part or district of a political division into another part of the same division where the officer was appointed or elected to represent the interests of the former part in the whole division.² Neither are they in accord as to the effect of a nonresidence created by a division of the district in such manner that the residence of the officer is located outside of the place where the official duties are to be performed.³ But where a nonresidence so caused would create a vacancy, the officer is entitled to a reasonable time for removal.⁴ The cause of an absence exceeding the statutory limit is immaterial.⁵ There must be an absolute intent to change one's residence.⁶ An officer's authority will not be terminated by his going away for a limited period of time without intending to give up his office or to cease to discharge the duties thereof.⁷ After one has abandoned his residence and has forfeited his office therefor, a subsequent return will not purge the forfeiture.⁸

c. NEGLECT AND REFUSAL TO PERFORM OFFICIAL DUTIES. — Abandoning the office or persistently neglecting to attend to the duties thereof is another method of effecting a vacancy in office.¹ But in general, mere absence must be unreasonably prolonged to destroy the right to the office;² and the nonuser must be of such a character and for so long a time as to show plainly a complete abandonment.³

d. ACCEPTANCE OF INCOMPATIBLE OFFICE. — It is an unquestioned rule that an officer vacates his office by the acceptance of another place in the public service, the functions and duties of which are incompatible with those incident to the office first held;⁴ and this even though the second office is of an inferior grade.⁵ But the rule does not apply, of course, when the officer is made ineligible to hold the second office.⁶ And it would be an anomaly in the law if a public officer who could not directly resign or who could not be removed without the concurrence or privity of a superior authority should be able to accomplish the same object indirectly by an acceptance of an incompatible office.⁷ The resignation of the second office will not effect a restoration to the first office.⁸

CONSTITUTIONAL PHASES OF POWER OF REMOVAL*—(1) Nature of Power as Executive, Legislative, or Judicial.—While the decisions are not in accord as to the nature of the power of removal, considered as an abstract question, the consensus of opinion is that it is not judicial, in the absence of fundamental restrictions, in the sense that its exercise may not be vested in the executive branch of the government,⁶ or in municipal boards and bodies,⁷ or even be retained by the legislature itself without violating the constitutional distribution of powers.⁸ The cases usually cited to the contrary hold that where the office is of constitutional creation the power to remove for cause must be considered as of a judicial nature, not to be exercised by the executive branch of the government in the absence of a constitutional grant of power to do so.¹

For Purpose of Review. — A greater diversity of opinion exists as to the nature of the power considered with respect to the authority of the courts to interfere with or to review, in any of its phases, the action of the person or body vested with the power of removal, but it is generally held that if the removal is authorized to be made only for cause, either general or specific, the courts may inquire into the existence of the jurisdictional facts,² whether the charges upon which the removing power acted were legal cause for removal,³ or whether the cause was sufficiently specified.⁴ There is no authority to review the action of an executive officer vested with the power of removing a subordinate under a constitutional provision which is silent as to grounds of removal,⁵ and where the power is conferred to remove at pleasure,⁶ or for reasons satisfactory to the removing power,⁷ or where the only requirement is that there be credible information of neglect of duty, the courts cannot interfere.⁸ The judgment of the removing power on the evidence cannot be departed from,⁹ nor can its discretion, exercised in a legal manner, be

Yet it has been held that this presumption applies only to the heads of co-ordinate departments of the government, and not to the action of municipal boards and inferior judicatories and depositories of specially delegated and limited powers; as to the latter, "nothing shall be intended to be within the jurisdiction that is not expressly averred so to be."¹ While all reasonable presumptions must be made in favor of the regularity and validity of the action of tribunals exercising the power of removal,² yet it will not be presumed from a record which shows merely the removal of an officer that such removal was for cause shown.³ The power of removal for cause, when conferred upon a court, is a judicial and not an executive power, and is subject to review by an appellate tribunal.⁴

(2) Departure from Constitutional and Statutory Requirements. — When the constitution has declared the grounds or mode of removal of an incumbent before the expiration of his term, the legislature has no power to authorize the removal or suspension of the officer for any other reason or in any other mode,⁵ nor can the statute⁶ or charter declaring the mode and ground of removal be departed from by the body vested with the power of removal.⁷ On the other hand, the constitutional right of the appointing power to remove at pleasure cannot be abridged by an act providing for removal in a certain way or for a certain cause. A provision that certain incumbents shall hold their offices or positions during good behavior⁸ or at pleasure cannot be thwarted by the appointing power by making the appointment for a specified period.⁹ The tenure of ancient common-law officers and the rules and principles by which they are governed generally have no application to offices created by federal or state constitutions,¹ and therefore the legislature, in creating offices, unless otherwise restricted by the constitution, may authorize the removal of the incumbent without notice or hearing,² and for any act not inconsistent with the constitution;³ and if the incumbent holds office under a statute providing that his office shall be held during good behavior, or for a fixed period, or that he shall be removed only for cause, this does not operate to restrict further legislation in making the incumbent removable at will.⁴ And similarly, though statutory officers were originally removable at pleasure, they may be protected against removal except upon notice and hearing.⁵ Providing for the suspension from office until the charges preferred are tried by the proper tribunal does not violate the constitutional right of an officer to hold and exercise his office.⁶ Where the removal from a state office is for cause, a state statute providing for bringing the party against whom the proceeding is had into court and notifying him of the case he has to meet, for giving him an opportunity to be heard in his own defense, and for the deliberation and judgment of the court, is not repugnant to that section of the Constitution of the United States which provides against the taking of property "without due process of law."⁷

Self-operating Provisions. — In several states the mode and grounds of removal are sufficiently prescribed in the constitution without the assistance of legislative action to carry the provision into effect.⁸

been given nor the official oath taken,¹ but an appointment made by a board may be revoked at any time before the certificate of appointment is issued, and another person may be appointed.²

(4) Implied Removal of Subordinates. — The fact that one who holds office under a certificate of election was adjudged in a contest not to be entitled to the office does not operate to remove a person appointed by him while in office pending the contest.³ An appointment of an officer does not operate to remove a clerk appointed by his predecessor.⁴

c. PERSONS AND BOARDS VESTED WITH POWER OF REMOVAL — (1) General Principles. — At common law the power of appointment and removal, except where otherwise provided, belonged to the king,⁵ but in the United States, there being no offices but those of either constitutional or statutory creation, the power of removal is generally expressly provided for;⁶ and where no provision is made therefor it is generally incident to the power of appointment.⁷ The power of removal may be vested elsewhere than in the appointing power,⁸ and may exist concurrently but independently in two or more bodies, so that the legislature may have sole power to impeach civil officers for corruption or crime, while at the same time they are subject to removal by the governor for gross neglect of duty.⁹ It may be vested in the governor alone, although the appointment is made by the governor by and with the consent and advice of the senate.¹⁰ Generally, if the power of appointment is vested in one officer, the appointee to be approved by another, the concurrent action of both is necessary to effect a removal,¹¹ though it is usually provided that the executive alone may appoint during a recess of the legislative body which otherwise would be required to concur in his action.¹² When the statute confers the power of removal only upon a certain body, if that body is itself removed from office,¹ or if the office itself is abolished, the power of removal can be exercised by no other.² A legislative body has power to remove one of its members for cause,³ and its speaker at pleasure.⁴ The removing officer has jurisdiction to hear and determine charges for official misconduct which occurred before the date of the creation of his office, where the acts occurred during the incumbency of the officer whom it is sought to remove.⁵

(2) Power of President. — From the earliest times, and until the administration of President Johnson, the power of the President alone to remove officers appointed by him, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, was recognized in legislation as well as in practice, though the Constitution is silent as to the power of removal.⁶ During this administration a statute called the Tenure of Office Act was passed by Congress, which limited the President's power as to removal.⁷ This statute having been repealed,⁸ the President's power to remove is again unrestricted except as to military officers in times of peace.⁹

(3) Power of Removal as Incident to Power of Appointment. — The power to remove is incident to the power to appoint in the absence of some provision of law fixing the duration of the office and the mode of removal.¹⁰ So every municipal corporation has, as incident to it, the power to amove its officers for cause, although in the United States the mode and grounds of removal are usually provided for by statute.¹ But the power cannot be exercised by a part of the corporation unless particularly vested therein.²

d. PERSONS SUBJECT TO REMOVAL, INCLUDING RIGHT TO NOTICE —
(1) In General. — There are usually constitutional and statutory provisions as to appointment and removal which control in determining what officers may be removed.³

Distinction Between State and Other Officers. — In providing for the method and power of removal, several constitutions and statutes distinguish between state and other officers,⁴ and in the interpretation of statutes relating to removal it is frequently necessary to determine whether the officer is attached to a county, city, or other political division.¹ A constitutional provision that appointed officers may be removed at the pleasure of the power by which they shall have been appointed applies as well to municipal as to state officers.²

Distinction Between Officers and Employees. — A distinction is also made as between officers and employees.³

Judicial Officers, when subject to removal otherwise than by impeachment, are removable only for cause.⁴

(2) Before and After Holding Office. — A summary proceeding against public officers who have charged and collected illegal fees, or have refused or neglected to perform their official duties, cannot be maintained against those who have ceased to hold office.⁵ And a constitutional provision authorizing the removal of officers does not apply to those to whom certificates of election have been issued, but who have neglected to give bond and take the prescribed oath.⁶

(3) As Affected by Mode of Appointment and Tenure of Office. — When the office is to be held during good behavior,⁷ or for a period fixed by the constitution or by statute, and in the absence of any provision authorizing a summary removal, such removal may be made only for cause.⁸

Right to Notice. — In either of such cases the person proposed to be removed is entitled to notice of the charges intended to be preferred against him, and to a reasonable opportunity to make defense.¹ The mere silence of the statute with respect to notice and hearing will not justify the removal of the officer whose term or tenure is declared by law, without knowledge of the charges and an opportunity to explain and defend.² The cases are not in accord as to whether or not the grant of a general power to remove officers appointed for a definite time carries with it the right to remove at any time or in any manner deemed best,³ but the prevailing rule is that if the power is conferred to remove for cause, either general⁴ or specific, a judicial investi-

Temporary and Probationary Appointments. — Temporary clerks are not entitled to notice and hearing,¹ but the appointee for a probationary term in the city of New York cannot, during such term, be removed without notice and opportunity to be heard, and a rule permitting a peremptory discharge during that period is unauthorized by the statute.² The probationary period does not necessarily commence to run from the date of appointment, but from the date when the appointment is to take effect.³

Giving Notice of Rights. — The cases are not entirely in accord as to whether it is necessary for one claiming a preference in retention to give notice of his right before dismissal.⁴

De Facto Officers and Employees. — An act restraining the removal of veterans except for cause does not apply to one holding a position by a mere de facto title, and whose employment or appointment was for any reason illegal. The incumbent of an office to which he was appointed without the civil-service examination required by law is not protected by said statute from summary removal.⁵ It has been held that an incumbent appointed in violation of the act giving preference to veterans cannot be removed in an action brought by a veteran to which the incumbent is not a party.⁶

Military Officers. — At common law it is not necessary that the removal of a military officer be founded upon an existing cause,⁷ and in New York the civil service acts are expressly made inapplicable to the military service.⁸

(b) Dismissal on Grounds of Economy. — The acts prohibiting removal unless the incumbent has been informed of the cause of the proposed removal and has been allowed an opportunity to be heard do not apply to a case where the incumbent is removed because the office or position is abrogated in good faith and there is no further need of his services, or because there are no funds provided for his payment.⁹

May Transfer Duties to Office Not Filled by Veteran. — People v. King, 13 N. Y. App. Div. 400; People v. Adams, 51 Hun (N. Y.) 583;

(6) Removal of Veterans, Retention of Others. — The purpose of the veteran's act being to give such persons preference both in employment and in retention in office, a veteran cannot be removed while any other person employed for an indefinite time is retained to perform duties of the kind discharged by such veteran,¹ even though the removing officer does not know that such clerk is a veteran and though he is the least efficient man in the bureau in which he is employed.²

e. CAUSES FOR REMOVAL — (1) Definitions. — The word "cause" or "sufficient cause" employed in a statute authorizing removal means "legal cause," and not merely any cause which the removing power may think sufficient; it must be one touching the qualifications of the officer or the performance of his duties, showing that he is not a fit or proper person to hold the office.³ An authorization to impose penalties for certain disabilities and offenses does not restrict the power of removal therefor.⁴

Nonfeasance, which was ground for removal at common law, was the nonperformance of some official act which ought to have been performed.⁵

Misfeasance is a default in an officer in not doing a lawful act in a proper manner — omitting to do it as it should be done.⁶

Malfeasance is the doing of an act wholly unlawful and wrongful.⁷

By Official Misconduct is meant any unlawful behavior in relation to the duties of his office, wilful in its character, of any officer intrusted in any manner with the administration of justice or the execution of the laws.⁸

Disorderly Conduct Defined. — State v. Teasdale, 21 Fla. 652.

Incompetency means lack of fitness to discharge the duties of the position.¹

When Wilfulness Is an Ingredient of the Act made ground for removal, the word "wilful" is not used in its most general sense, as in obedience to the will, and an official act done or committed cannot be said to be wilful unless the officer knew or believed that it was his official duty to do or omit the act, and, with such knowledge or belief, perversely acted or failed to act.²

(2) Criminal Nature of Act.—While to authorize a removal it is not requisite that the acts be such as would subject the officer to a criminal prosecution, it being sufficient that they were done knowingly in violation of official duties,³ the fact that the acts involve a criminal offense⁴ or a high degree of moral turpitude is immaterial.⁵

(3) Intent and Motive as Affecting Nature of Act.—The materiality of the intent or motive depends generally on the character of the particular act charged as ground for removal, but in general, mistakes honestly made and without any lack of diligence on the part of the officer, although they may, under certain circumstances, furnish grounds for a civil action against him, are not causes for removal.⁶

(4) Necessity of Prior Conviction.—Lord Mansfield classified removable offenses as follows: First, such as have no immediate relation to his office, but are in themselves of so infamous a nature as to render the officer unfit to execute any public franchise; second, such as are only against his oath and the duty of his office and amount to breaches of the tacit condition annexed to his franchise or office; the third sort of offense for which an officer or corporator may be displaced is of a mixed nature, as being an offense not only against the duty of his office, but also a matter indictable at common law.⁷ In the absence of statute this classification is generally adhered to in the United States for the purpose of determining the necessity of a prior conviction of the offense before removal.⁸ To authorize a removal for such offenses

as have no immediate relation to the office, but are in themselves of so infamous a nature as to render the officer unfit to execute any public franchise, there must have been a previous conviction.¹ If a statute provides for removal after conviction of the offense charged, there can be no removal in any other way.² As to such offenses as are against the oath and duty of the officer, there need be no conviction of the offense before initiating the proceeding for removal,³ and constitutional provisions relative to the necessity of an indictment as a condition precedent to a prosecution do not apply.⁴ Although no rule was laid down in the leading case on the subject as to offenses not only against the duty of the office, but matters indictable at common law, these being the third class of offenses constituting grounds for removal,⁵ the practice in the United States is not to await the action of the criminal branch of the administration of justice before commencing the proceeding for removal from office.⁶

(5) Unofficial Acts in General. — The misconduct for which an officer may be removed must be found in his acts and conduct in the office from which he is removed, must constitute a legal cause of removal, and must affect the proper administration of his office,⁷ but the line of demarcation between acts official and unofficial is not always apparent.⁸

(6) Acts Before Appointment, in Other Offices, and in Prior Terms of Same Office. — Ground for removal cannot be based upon acts done before election and not affecting eligibility;¹ nor upon misconduct in another public office,² even though the misconduct consisted in the failure to account for moneys received when in such other office;³ nor upon acts committed in a prior term of the same office,⁴ even though the act was done while the officer was suspended, during his previous term, pending an action to remove him from office at that time.⁵ But this rule does not apply to an unlawful act committed after re-election and while performing the functions of office, but before qualification.⁶

(7) Acts Touching Qualification and Competency — (a) In General. — A defect in the original qualification,⁷ alienism,⁸ failure by one in office to give the bond required for the collection and accounting for revenue,⁹ failure to give a new bond, or refusing to have the sureties qualify in the manner prescribed by a statute passed since the induction into office, may be ground for removal.¹⁰ But it is otherwise as to the failure to give the official bond before entering upon the performance of the duties of the office.¹¹ After entering upon the discharge of the functions of the office, one may be rendered incompetent or disqualified to continue in the performance thereof.¹²

(b) Bankruptcy and Insolvency. — Neither bankruptcy, in the absence of criminal default,¹³ nor pecuniary inability to pay one's debts, where the officer is not imprisoned for debt, is ground for removal.¹⁴

(c) Nonresidence. — At common law, wherever nonresidence is assigned as the cause for removal of an alderman or officer of similar denomination, it must appear that residence is required by the constitution of the corporation, or that the business of the corporation has been obstructed by the nonresidence of the party removed.¹ A total desertion of the borough, however, was ground of removal.² In the United States the temporary removal of a county officer into another county, though for the purpose of engaging in business therein, is not ground for removal,³ but if the removal of the incumbent from the county is intended to be permanent,⁴ or for an unreasonable time, the office is vacated.⁵

(8) Acts Affecting Conduct of Office — (a) Illegal and Unauthorized Acts. — Conducting the office for personal gain and to the injury of third persons or the public in general,⁶ and wilful and malicious oppression in office, are grounds for removal.⁷ Officers have been removed for the commission of various unauthorized acts.⁸ Other irregular or unauthorized acts have been held not to constitute sufficient grounds for removal.⁹ One may, in good faith, bring a suit against the city of which he is an officer, for the assertion of a supposed right, without being subject to removal therefor.¹⁰

(b) Refusal to Perform Official Duties. — The wilful refusal to perform what one knows to be his official duty is ground for removal.¹¹

(c) Negligence. — Gross negligence in the discharge of a fiduciary trust is evidence of fraud and misbehavior in office,¹² but an officer's neglect of duty must be either habitual or wilful in order to justify his removal.¹³

(d) Nonattendance. — Nonattendance is ground for removal only according to the circumstances of each particular case.¹

(e) Disobedience and Contumacy. — A threat of disobedience of a superior officer's order where the words were spoken under exasperating circumstances,² or the use of abusive language to a superior officer,³ or of scandalous language by a police judge of an attorney and other officers,⁴ or threats expressed in general terms at a meeting of the governing body or municipality, are not grounds for removal.⁵ But it may be otherwise if such misconduct tends to disturb the orderly transaction of public business.⁶ The writing of a libel on the mayor is not ground for removing a municipal officer,⁷ particularly if the libelous letter was never sent,⁸ but the publication by the superintendent of a public institution, for circulation among its inmates, of a defamatory article unjustly criticising the lawful acts of a board of visitors is "cause" within the meaning of the statute.⁹ Noncompliance with a verbal order to commit persons to jail in an adjoining county is not ground for removal.¹⁰

(f) Escape and Maltreatment of Prisoners. — The barbarous misuse of prisoners is ground for removal.¹¹ Wilfully permitting the escape of a prisoner is a "wilful neglect of duty or misdemeanor in office" within the meaning of a statute authorizing removal on those grounds;¹² and allowing a condemned prisoner to be free for a limited time is ground for removal.¹³

(g) Falsification of Records and Issuance of False Certificates. — In general, the spoliation of the records,¹⁴ or making false entries therein,¹⁵ or issuing false certificates are acts authorizing the dismissal of the officer committing them;¹⁶ but alterations in immaterial respects,¹⁷ and small errors resulting from a mistake,

Approving Bill. — Approving a bill which ordinary care and diligence would have shown to be not a proper bill is misfeasance in office, while in the performance of duty, approving a bill known by the officer to be fraudulent is malfeasance in office. Colburn v. Neufarth, Ohio Prob. 24.

Return and Sheriff's Deed Containing Untrue Recital constitute no ground for removal where they are merely nominal and preliminary. See State v. Bourgeois, 47 La. Ann. 184. And see State v. Leach, 60 Me. 58, 11 Am. Rep. 172.

17. Rex v. Chalke, 1 Ld. Raym. 225.

or from want of skill, or from inadvertence, or from the imperfections and frailties incident to all men, are not to be considered breaches of good behavior.¹

(h) Keeping Office at Unlawful Place. — Refusing in good faith to recognize as the county seat a place illegally chosen as such is no ground for removal,² nor is failing to keep one's office at the county seat of his county, unless the failure be wilful and corrupt, where the statute requires wilful misconduct.³

(i) Defalcation. — Devoting public funds to personal uses constitutes a "mis-demeanor" and establishes "incompetency," as contemplated by a statute authorizing removal on these grounds.⁴

(j) Exacting Illegal Fees and Compensation. — While the taking of illegal fees under a bona fide claim of right is not of itself cause for removal from office,⁵ yet if the money is taken from corrupt motives it is.⁶ So procuring the allowance to himself of fees to which he knew he was not entitled is corruption in office on the part of the officer, though he makes no false returns.⁷

(g) Indictment, Conviction of Crime, and Imprisonment. — Though conviction of particular crimes, by statute, forfeits the right of suffrage and of testifying as a witness, it does not therefore, in the absence of statute, cause a forfeiture of a public office held by the person convicted.⁸

(io) Bribery and Kindred Offenses. — The constitutional and statutory denunciation of particular crimes, such as bribery, cannot be extended any further than the imposition of the fixed penalties; therefore bribery or an offer to bribe, prior to election,⁹ or the offense of giving money by candidates to wager on an election, is not ground for removal from office;¹⁰ but it is otherwise as to offering,¹¹ soliciting,¹² or receiving a bribe while in office.¹³ Hiring one's predecessor to resign and procuring one's own appointment cannot be made the basis of the prosecution for misbehavior in office.¹

(11) Intoxication. — In some jurisdictions drunkenness while engaged in the performance of official duties has been held to be misconduct in office,² but the contrary has been maintained in others.³ Habitual intemperance, however, is ground for removal.⁴

(12) Acts Peculiarly Affecting Police Officers. — In many jurisdictions, particularly in New York, rules and regulations have been made to maintain the discipline and increase the efficiency of the police force, and the infraction of such rules is usually attended with removal, after notice of charges and hearing. Such violations may consist of personal misconduct,⁵ the infringement of the rights of third persons,⁶ conduct towards associates subversive of discipline,⁷ maltreatment of prisoners,⁸ the acceptance of gratuities,⁹ disobedience of orders,¹⁰ neglect of duty,¹¹ and the commission of criminal offenses.¹²

(13) Acts of Subordinates. — One cannot be removed for the inefficiency or incapacity of an assistant whom he had no power of appointing,¹ or whose misconduct he has not sanctioned.² But it is otherwise where he has sought to benefit himself by converting to his own use the moneys received from the deputy's act, illegally but inadvertently committed.³

(14) Removal of Subordinates. — A vacancy in the office of the person appointing him is not cause for removal of a subordinate.⁴

f. NATURE OF PROCEEDING AS AFFECTING SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS. — The cases are not in accord as to the purposes for which a removal proceeding should, in prosecution and effect, be considered criminal or civil.⁵ It does not preclude the subsequent prosecution for the criminal offense made ground for removal.⁶ In New York the proceeding is criminal within the meaning of the rule entitling the accused to the presumption of innocence,⁷ and except in this state the accused is not compelled to be a witness against himself.⁸ The proceeding upon a petition to the governor for the removal of an officer is quasi-judicial, and statements made in such petition, if pertinent, are absolutely privileged.⁹

g. CONDITIONS PRECEDENT TO REMOVAL. — Every condition precedent must be fulfilled to give validity to the act of removal.¹⁰

h. EVIDENCE. — Although the proceedings conducted before an executive board are usually held to be of a quasi-judicial character, the usual rules pertaining to the admission of evidence in courts of justice are not always strictly adhered to, but they should be as far as possible.¹¹ Except in those cases where the power of removal is committed wholly to the discretion of the removing body, the charges must be sustained by the quantum of legally competent evidence which, at law, is required to support the verdict of a jury in a civil action.¹ The sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings has been frequently considered, but as the various cases have nothing more in common than a general resemblance due to the identity of the offense charged, it is not practicable to deduce from them principles of general application, but the cases have been arranged in groups with reference to the specific charge in each.²

power of removal vested in a particular officer by the constitution the legislature may add the power of suspension pending investigation of charges.¹ An authorization to suspend pending investigation of charges does not confer the power to remove.²

j. NOTICE OF SUSPENSION OR REMOVAL. — To complete a removal it is necessary that a notice thereof should be received by the officer removed, though the office is held during pleasure, and therefore, until such notice is received the officer is not liable as a trespasser, and as to third persons his acts are valid.³ The right of a successor to assume office is not affected by the failure to give notice of removal to the prior incumbent.⁴ Persisting in the performance of the functions incident to the office after authentic information of judicial removal is contempt of court.⁵

k. EFFECT AND INCIDENTS OF REMOVAL — (1) In General. — The removal of an officer terminates his right to exercise the duties of an office until the validity of the removal has been decided at law,⁶ and there are no powers left in him as an officer upon which to hold over until his successor is elected and qualified.⁷

(2) When Effective. — Though the fact of removal is required to be communicated to a legislative body for their action thereon, such removal takes effect at once and does not operate merely as a suspension pending the action of such body,⁸ but the officer is entitled to resume his office immediately after the adjournment of the legislature if no action has been taken.⁹

(3) Liability of Successor. — An officer unlawfully removed may recover from the intruder, upon reinstatement, the damages resulting from the intrusion.¹⁰ An action on the statutory bond, however, given to indemnify the person removed, where the proceeding for removal was dismissed because of the expiration of the officer's term, cannot be maintained without showing that the alleged causes for removal were untrue.¹

1. REINSTATEMENT — (1) In General. — Neither a reappointment² nor legal process is necessary to restore to office a person who has been illegally removed by one who has no authority to do so;³ but the revocation of a legal order of removal will not restore an officer, not, at least, if he is of the military class.⁴ A laborer illegally discharged is not entitled to resume his former work, but only to be restored to the "laborer's" class, and may be called upon to do any work required by the best interests of the department.⁵ One discharged for lack of work must, on seeking reinstatement, show that there is need of his services.⁶ The right to reinstatement in the position from which one was transferred may be waived by acquiescence and the acceptance of the lower compensation.⁷ Delinquent officers will not be restored to office because of irregularities in the proceedings under which they were removed when it would be the duty of those having the authority to do so to remove them immediately on restoration.⁸

(2) Effect of Reversal of Judgment of Removal. — It has been held that the reversal of a judgment removing an officer from office restores him thereto without need of any further order.⁹

(3) Laches. — Laches in seeking reinstatement is ground for denial of the relief sought. This rule has been frequently applied on application for reinstatement of persons claiming to have been wrongfully removed under the civil service and veteran acts.¹⁰

m. EFFECT OF SUPERSEDEAS. — While a supersedeas in general stays the execution of a judgment of ouster,¹¹ it will not have the effect of restoring to office one who was removed and whose successor was appointed before the supersedeas took effect.¹² Where the suspension is in the discretion of the judge and may continue throughout the whole litigation, the court may refuse to restore the officer removed, pending his appeal, upon his executing a supersedeas bond, though the supersedeas stays judgment of removal;¹³ and where the successor appointed has no knowledge of the execution of the supersedeas, it will not be contempt of court on his part to refuse to surrender the office to the former incumbent.¹⁴

6. Termination of Office of One as Affecting Powers of Co-ordinate Officers. — The policy of the law is to guard against a failure of a public service, and a grant of power in the nature of a public office to several does not in general become void upon the death or disability of one or more,¹⁵ provided there is left a sufficient number to confer together.¹⁶

XVI. TRAFFIC IN PUBLIC OFFICES. — Elsewhere in this work will be found a full discussion of questions concerning the buying and selling of public offices.¹

PUBLIC PARKS. — See the title PARKS AND PUBLIC SQUARES, vol. 21, p. 1065.

PUBLIC PEACE. (See also the title BREACH OF THE PEACE, vol. 4, p. 902.) — Public peace is public tranquillity, that quiet order and freedom from agitation or disturbance which is guaranteed by the law.²

PUBLIC PERFORMANCE. — See PUBLIC AMUSEMENT, EXHIBITION, ETC., ante.

PUBLIC PLACE. — “A public place does not mean a place devoted solely to the uses of the public, but it means a place which is in point of fact public, as distinguished from private, — a place that is visited by many persons, and usually accessible to the neighboring public. * * * A place may be public during some hours of the day, and private during other hours.”³ The term is a relative one. What is a “public place” for one purpose is not for another. A “public place” within the meaning of a statute prescribing the time and place for posting notices of tax sales may not be a “public place” within the common-law definition of an affray; and so a place which is public in one community is not necessarily so in another.⁴ In the notes will be found interpretations of the term as used in various connections.⁵

2. Public Peace. — Neuendorff v. Duryea, 6 Daly (N. Y.) 280. In that case it was held that an act prohibiting theatrical and other exhibitions and entertainments on Sunday in the city of New York, entitled “An act to preserve the public peace,” fulfilled the requirements of Const. N. Y., art. 3, § 16, which provides that the subject of any private or local bill shall be expressed in the title. See generally the title STATUTES.

In State v. Benedict, 11 Vt. 239, the court, per Redfield, J., said: “What is the public peace? Almost every one has some more or less certain notion of the public peace, and still it may not be very easy to define it in words. It is, so to speak, that invisible sense of security which every man feels so necessary to his comfort, and for which all governments are instituted.”

in a crowded and populous city, and what would be a public place in a small town, sparsely inhabited, are entirely different questions.” Cahoon v. Coe, 57 N. H. 572.

Mixed Question of Law and Fact. — Whether a place is a public place is a mixed question of law and fact. Sisk v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. 462; Parker v. State, 26 Tex. 204.

5. Term “Public Place” as Used in Gaming Laws. — See the titles GAMING, vol. 14, p. 678; GAMING HOUSES, vol. 14, p. 699.

Within Meaning of Law of Indecent Exposure. — See the title EXPOSURE OF PERSON, vol. 12, p. 538.

Within Meaning of Statutes Requiring Notices to Be Posted in Public Places. — See the titles ELECTIONS, vol. 10, p. 632; SHERIFFS’ SALES; TAX TITLES.

Barber’s Shop. — A barber’s shop is a public place within a gaming statute. Cochran v. State, 30 Ala. 542.

Blacksmith’s Shop. — A blacksmith’s shop is not necessarily a public place. Lorimer v. State, 76 Ind. 496.

Bulletin Board. — In Roach v. Eugene, 23 Oregon 376, it was held that bulletin boards in the court house and city hall and at the corner of two public streets were public places within a statute requiring certain notices to be posted at such places.

Booth on Racecourse. — In Reg. v. Saunders, 1 Q. B. D. 15, 13 Cox C. C. 116, it was held that a booth on a racecourse, into which persons were admitted upon payment only, was a public place so as to support an indictment for an indecent exhibition therein at common law.

Church. — In Scammon v. Scammon, 28 N. H. 428, it was held that houses of public worship are ordinarily and prima facie to be regarded as public places. To the same effect see Tidd v. Smith, 3 N. H. 181.

Court House. — In King v. Stow, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 332, a court house was held to be a PUBLIC POLICY. (See also the titles ILLEGAL CONTRACTS, vol. 15, p. 927; RESTRAINT OF TRADE.)—I. That principle of the law which holds that no one can lawfully do that which has a tendency to be injurious to the public, or public place within a statute requiring an advertisement to be posted in a public place.

Depot.—A Montana statute provided that notice of the presentation of a petition for laying out a county road should be posted in four public places in the vicinity of the proposed road. It was held that posting at a railroad depot about six or seven hundred feet from the proposed road was a posting in a public place in compliance with the statute. Territory v. Lannon, 9 Mont. 1.

Grand-jury Room.—A grand-jury room has been held to be a public place within a statute against intoxication. Murchison v. State, 24 Tex. App. 8.

Highway.—In In re Timson, L. R. 5 Exch. 257, it was held that a public highway was not necessarily a place of public resort within the meaning of an act against vagrancy. See also In re Davis, 2 H. & N. 149.

So in Williams v. State, 64 Ind. 553, 31 Am. Rep. 135, it was held that the words "on a public highway," in an indictment, were not equivalent to the words "in any public place" in a statute against lewdness. See also State v. Weekly, 29 Ind. 206.

But in State v. Moriarty, 74 Ind. 103, it was held that an indictment alleging that the defendant was found intoxicated "in a public street, highway, and sidewalk" charged that the offense was committed in a public place. Overruling Williams v. State, 64 Ind. 553. And see State v. Welch, 88 Ind. 308.

And that a public highway is prima facie a public place, see State v. Wabash Paper Co., 21 Ind. App. 167; State v. Berdetta, 73 Ind. 185; Rosenstein v. State, 9 Ind. App. 290.

A corresponding New Hampshire statute was as follows: "If any person shall be found drunk in any street, alley, or other public place, he shall be punished," etc. In State v. Stevens, 36 N. H. 59, it was held that the use of the words "street" and "alley" excluding the more general term "highway," indicated that public roads throughout the country were not intended to be embraced within the term public place. See also State v. Hall, 22 N. H. 384.

Inn.—In King v. Stow, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 323, an inn was held to be a public place within a statute requiring an advertisement to be published in a public place.

Same—Office of Hotel.—A city ordinance forbade wrangling or quarreling in any public place. It was held that the office of a hotel was a public place within the ordinance. Howard v. Stroud, 63 Kan. 883, 65 Pac. Rep. 249.

Same—Room in Hotel.—In Bordeaux v. State, 31 Tex. Crim. 37, it was held that proof that the defendant was intoxicated in his room in a hotel did not constitute proof of drunkenness in a public place.

Cock Fighting—Field Near Highway.—In Finnem v. State, 115 Ala. 106, the appellant was indicted for cock fighting. It was shown that the cock fighting took place in an old field grown up with bushes, about one-fourth or one-half mile from the public road. The appellant requested the court to charge that this was not a public place. The appellate court sustained the trial court in refusing to give such charge, saying: "The place, however secluded in and of itself, is made public by the assemblage there of people in such numbers, and the right of the public generally to assemble there on the occasion for the purpose of engaging in or witnessing cock fighting; and it is wholly immaterial whether there has ever before been any assemblage of people at that place for any purpose." But see State v. Tinch, 21 Ind. App. 145, where the court said that the above construction of the term public place is strained.

A corporation by-law provided that any person who should frequent or use any street or other place of public resort for the purpose of bookmaking or betting should be liable to a penalty. The appellant used for the purpose of bookmaking an uninclosed piece of private ground within the borough, bounded by streets; bookmakers and other persons habitually used the ground for betting, but without permission from the owners. It was held that the ground was a place of public resort within the meaning of the ordinance. Kitson v. Ashe, (1899) 1 Q. B. 425.

Same—As Used in City Ordinance Providing for Impounding of Cattle Running at Large upon Public Places.—The ordinance in question provided that it should be the duty of the police to take up any cattle running at large upon any "public street, alley, parks, or places." Cattle were taken on a parcel of land known as the "Methodist camp ground," which was within the city limits, and open to the public, and unoccupied. It was held that though the camp ground was private property, yet as it was open to the common, it was in a certain sense a public place, and it was therefore competent to the officer finding the cattle loose and at large upon the common, immediately after having been at large in public streets, to seize them. O'Mally v. McGinn, 53 Wis. 353.

Place Below Surface of Street.—Where a local act authorized the urban authority to erect and maintain "in any street or public place, or on land belonging to them" or under their control, lavatories for the use of the public, it was held that the urban authority had no power to excavate the soil and erect lavatories below the surface of a street. Tunbridge Wells v. Baird, (1896) A. C. 434, (1894) 2 Q. B. 867.

Presumption.—In Drake v. Mooney, 31 Vt. 617, it was held that there was no presumption without proof that the places described in an officer's return of a levy of an execution on personal property as the places where the sale was advertised and held were not public places.

Private Dwelling.—In State v. Pratt, 34 Vt. 323, it was held that evidence that for a considerable period of time a very large number of persons had been in the habit of going to the defendant's house, many more than went against the public good, may be termed the policy of the law, or public policy in relation to the administration of the law.¹ Public policy is in its nature so uncertain and fluctuating, varying with the habits and fashions of the day, with the growth of commerce, and the usages of trade, that it is difficult to determine its limits with any degree of exactness.² If a contract binds the maker to the houses of other persons in the same neighborhood, and many more than any business in which he was openly and honestly engaged furnished any occasion for, and that many of these persons came from other towns, at unusual hours, and under suspicious circumstances, was competent to be left to the jury to prove that the defendant's house had become a place of public resort; and if the defendant would avoid the effect of the presumption raised by such evidence, he must show some other reason for it, that being peculiarly within his knowledge.

Same — Drunkenness. — In State v. Waggoner, 52 Ind. 481, it was held that public place, as the term was used in a statute against intoxication in a public place, meant a place where all persons were entitled to be, and that a private residence where a party was given by a private citizen, to which the guests were invited, was not a public place. See also State v. Tischer, 21 Ind. App. 142; State v. Sowers, 52 Ind. 311; State v. Welch, 88 Ind. 308.

So in State v. Sowers, 52 Ind. 311, cited in Lorimer v. State, 76 Ind. 496, it was held that a private house was not a public place within a statute against intoxication in a public place.

Same — Veranda of Private House. — A statute made punishable the use of vulgar, profane, or obscene language in any street, highway, store, shop, or other public place, or place of public resort. It was held that a veranda of a person's own house, close to a public street, within the hearing of persons passing on such street, was a public place. Republic v. Ben, 10 Hawaii 279. And see the title OBSCENITY, vol. 21, p. 760.

Same — Posting Notice. — In Cahoon v. Coe, 57 N. H. 572, it was held that in the absence of any place more public, a dwelling house must be regarded as a public place for the purpose of posting a notice of a sale of land for taxes.

Public Place and Public House Distinguished. — See PUBLIC HOUSE, ante.

Public Square. — In Carter v. Abshire, 48 Mo. 300, it was held that the setting up of notice of sale on the sides of a public square in a town or city satisfied the requirement contained in a deed of trust that the notice should be put up in a public place in such town or city.

Schoolhouse May Be Public Place. — Russell v. Dyer, 40 N. H. 187; Wilson v. Bucknam, 71 Me. 547.

Shoemaker's Shop Held Not a Public Place. — Tidd v. Smith, 3 N. H. 181. But see the title GAMING, vol. 14, p. 679, where the contrary was held in a gaming case.

Village or Town. — A statute required an advertisement to be posted in three of the most public places of the county. It was held that it was a sufficient compliance with this statute to post the advertisement in three public places in one village, and that it would be "rather a forced construction of the words

'three of the most public places' to insist that they must be either so enlarged as to embrace three distinct villages or towns, or so confined as to admit notices to be affixed up in three different parts of one and the same building." King v. Stow, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 332.

1. Public Policy. — Egerton v. Brownlow, 4 H. L. Cas. 1; Edwards v. Randle, 63 Ark. 318; Fearnley v. De Mainville, 5 Colo. App. 441; Consumers' Oil Co. v. Nunemaker, 142 Ind. 564, 51 Am. St. Rep. 193; American Casualty Ins. Co.'s Case, 82 Md. 574; Dean v. Clark, 80 Hun (N. Y.) 86; Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Champlin, (Okla. 1901) 65 Pac. Rep. 836; People's Bank v. Dalton, 2 Okla. 476; Williams v. Board of Education, 45 W. Va. 199; Kellogg v. Larkin, 3 Pin. (Wis.) 136.

Other Definitions. — "Public policy means the public good. Anything that tends clearly to injure the public health, the public morals, the public confidence in the purity of the administration of the law, or to undermine that sense of security for individual rights, whether of personal liberty or of private property, which any citizen ought to feel, is against public policy." Goodyear v. Brown, 155 Pa. St. 514.

In Magee v. O'Neill, 19 S. Car. 185, it was said: "It cannot be the mere opinion of the judge upon any general question of public policy, or, in other words, whether the judges think that the interests of the public would be better advanced by tolerating or refusing to tolerate such provisos, but whether they are in contravention of any established law, or in contravention of the spirit though not against the letter of the law."

Story's Definition. — In Spence v. Harvey, 22 Cal. 340, quoting Story on Contracts, § 546, it was said: "It [the expression public policy] has never been defined by the courts, but has been left loose and free of definition, in the same manner as fraud. This rule may, however, be safely laid down, that wherever any contract conflicts with the morals of the time and contravenes any established interest of society, it is void, as being against public policy." See also Kitchen v. Greenbaum, 61 Mo. 115.

Public Policy in Sense of Law. — "The term public policy is frequently used in a very vague, loose, or inaccurate sense. The courts have often found it necessary to define its juridical meaning, and have held that a state can have no public policy except what is to be found in its constitution and laws. * * * Therefore, when we speak of the public policy of the state, we mean the law of the state, whether found in the constitution, the statutes, or judicial records." People v. Hawkins, 157 N. Y. 12. See also Vidal v. Philadelphia, 2 How. (U. S.) 127; Hollis v. Drew Theological Seminary, 95 N. Y. 166; Cross v. U. S. Trust Co., 131 N. Y. 343; Dammert v. Osborn, 140 N. Y. 40.

to do something opposed to the public policy of the state or nation, it is void, however solemnly made. For references to other doctrines, arising from the principle of public policy, see note 1.

II. Public policy is also defined as the policy upon which governmental affairs are conducted for the time being.²

PUBLIC PROSECUTOR. (See also the title PROSECUTING AND DISTRICT ATTORNEYS, ante.)—A public prosecutor is a quasi-judicial officer, retained by the public for the prosecution of persons accused of crime, in the exercise of a sound discretion to distinguish between the guilty and the innocent, between the certainly and the doubtfully guilty; never voluntarily to acquiesce in an acquittal upon certain presumption of guilt, or in conviction upon doubtful presumption of guilt.³

PUBLIC RECORDS. (See also the titles RECORD; RECORDING ACTS.)—A public record is a written memorial made by a public officer authorized by (5th ed.), § 675. See to the same effect Eger-ton v. Brownlow, 4 H. L. Cas. 123; Davies v. Davies, 36 Ch. D. 364; Richardson v. Mellish, 2 Bing. 229, 9 E. C. L. 391; Spence v. Harvey, 22 Cal. 340; Smith v. San Francisco, etc., R. Co., 115 Cal. 600; American Casualty Ins. Co.'s Case, 82 Md. 574; Kitchen v. Greenabaum, 61 Mo. 115; People v. Hawkins, 157 N. In Besant v. Wood, 12 Ch. D. 620, Jessel, M. R., said that public policy is to a great extent a matter of individual opinion, because what one man or one judge might think against public policy another might think altogether excellent public policy.

3. Public Prosecutor.—Wight v. Rindskopf, 43 Wis. 354.

4. Universal Public.—A charter of a water company was granted in consideration of water to be supplied by the company for public purposes. It was held that water supplied for the mayor's office, city hall, etc., was not water supplied for a public purpose. The court held that by the term public purpose, as thus used, was meant for the universal public and not for only a portion of it. Commercial Bank v. New Orleans, 17 La. Ann. 190.

Corporate Purpose.—In Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, 62 Ill. 276, it was said: "It is contended that the appropriation was not for a 'corporate purpose.' If it was for a public purpose—for the benefit of the inhabitants of the municipality—then it would be for a corporate purpose. The latter cannot be distinguished from the former; and all that we have said in relation to the public purpose of the tax will apply with equal force to a corporate purpose." See also Livingston County v. Darlington, 101 U. S. 413; Taylor v. Thompson, 42 Ill. 9.

Public or Objectionable Purpose. (See also the title BUILDING RESTRICTIONS AND RESTRICTIVE AGREEMENTS, vol. 5, p. 2.)—A lease provided that the leased premises should be occupied as a residence and not for any public or objectionable purpose. It was held that the use of the house as a boarding house was a violation law to perform that function, and intended to serve as evidence of something written, said, or done.¹

PUBLIC RESORT. — See PUBLIC PLACE, ante.

PUBLIC ROADS. (See also the titles HIGHWAYS, vol. 15, p. 343; STREETS AND SIDEWALKS; and see PRIVATE ROADS, ante; ROADS.) — A public road is defined to be a road dedicated to and kept up by the public, as contradistinguished from private ways which are not so kept up.² It is also defined as a way established and adopted by proper authority for the use of the public, over which every person has a right to pass, and which every person may use for all purposes of travel or transportation to which it is adapted and devoted.³

PUBLIC USE. (See also the titles EMINENT DOMAIN, vol. 10, pp. 1043, 1061; PATENTS, vol. 22, p. 336; TAXATION.) — A public use is one which concerns the whole community in which it exists, as contradistinguished from a particular individual or number of individuals.⁵

Highways. — In State v. Bassett, 33 N. J. L. 27, it was said: "Nothing is more common than to speak of any part of a highway as the public highway, or the public road."

Paper Street. — A deed described one of the boundaries of the land conveyed as a public road. The question arose whether the boundary intended was a mere paper street, as laid down on a plat, or an actual highway, known as such, and not by any name appearing on the plat. It was held that the actual highway was intended. Purkiss v. Benson, 28 Mich. 541.

Railroad. — In Comer v. State, 62 Ala. 321, it was held that though the track of a railroad company was a public road, it was not a public highway within the meaning of a statute against the use of vulgar and abusive language upon a public highway.

A statute authorized telegraph companies to erect the necessary fixtures for their lines upon any of the public roads, streets, and highways within the state. It was held that this did not authorize such a company to erect its poles and fixtures upon and along the right of way of a railroad company. New York City, etc., R. Co. v. Central Union Tel. Co., 21 Hun (N. Y.) 264. See generally the titles RAILROADS; TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES.

Streets. — In the charter of a railroad company the corporation was empowered to construct its road across or along any public road. It was held that, as used in this connection, the term public roads did not include a street or alley in a city. Tennessee, etc., R. Co. v. Adams, 3 Head (Tenn.) 596.

Public Roads Distinguished from Turnpikes. — In distinguishing between a public road and a turnpike, in Bradshaw v. Rodgers, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 105, the court said: "The former is open and public for the passage of every person, without any toll or other imposition; whereas the latter is private property, subject to be traveled over on first paying an equivalent for its use, prescribed by the legislature." See also the title TURNPIKES.

Insurance Patrol — Respondent Superior. — In Fire Ins. Patrol v. Boyd, 120 Pa. St. 647, it was held that a corporation acting in aid of the city of Philadelphia in the preservation of life and property at fires, without gain or profit to itself, was a public charity and not subject to the doctrine of respondent superior, notwithstanding the fact that among its acknowledged objects was that of lessening the losses of fire insurance companies.

Orphanage. — In Hall v. Urban Sanitary Authority, 16 Q. B. D. 163, it was held that an orphanage founded and used for the purpose of boarding, lodging, clothing, and educating the children of deceased railway servants, and supported partly by subscriptions from railway servants but mainly by donations from the public, was open to such an extensive class of the community of the kingdom that the premises were used and occupied exclusively for the purposes of public charity.

Destruction of Property to Prevent Spread of Fire. — In Keller v. Corpus Christi, 50 Tex.

PUBLIC WAYS. — Public ways, as the term is applied to ways by land, are usually termed highways or public roads, and are such as every citizen has the right to use.¹

PUBLIC WORKS. — This term includes all fixed works constructed for public use, as railways, docks, canals, waterworks, roads, etc.²

PUBLIC WORSHIP. (See also the title RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.) — See note 3.

PUBLISH. (See also the titles NEWSPAPERS, vol. 21, p. 533; PUBLICATION, ante.) — To publish is to send forth, as a book, newspaper, musical piece, or 629, it was held that the destruction of property by a hook and ladder company, part of the fire department of the city, for the purpose of preventing the spreading of fire, was for a public use, and not for such private corporate use as would authorize a suit at common law. See also the title FIRE DEPARTMENT, vol. 13, p. 80.

Purchase of Real Estate by County. — By statute a county had no authority to become the purchaser of real estate sold on execution in its favor, where the purchase was not made for the public use of the county. In construing this statute in Williams v. Lash, 8 Minn. 496, the court said: "The public use by the county, mentioned in the statute, must mean that actual use, occupation, and possession of real estate rendered necessary for the proper discharge of the administrative or other functions of the county, through its appropriate officers." See also James v. Wilder, 25 Minn. 305.

Indictment for Arson. — In Com. v. Horrigan, 2 Allen (Mass.) 159, it was held that an indictment for burning in the nighttime a building erected for public use was sustained by proof of burning in the nighttime a building removed by the city and afterwards fitted up as a school house and engine house.

Streets. — In Lark v. State, 55 Ga. 437, it was held that the streets of a city were public works within a statute providing that convicts might be placed at work upon the public works.

But in McHugh v. Boston, 173 Mass. 408, it was held that a public highway was not a public work "owned by a city or town," within a statute which provided that a person to whom a debt was due "for labor performed in constructing any building, sewer, drain, waterworks, or other public works owned by a city" should have a right of action against the city.

Pumping Station. — A statute provided that before any city should be liable for any injury to any person by reason of any defect in any public ground or public works of any kind of the city, a notice therein required should be given. It was held that a pumping station was included in the term public works. Winters v. Duluth, 82 Minn. 130.

Channel of River. — See Hamburg American Packet Co. v. Rex, 7 Can. Exch. 143.

Rifle Range. — In Larose v. Rex, 31 Can. Sup. Ct. 206, affirming 6 Can. Exch. 425, it was held that a rifle range under the control of the department of militia and defense was not a public work.

Public Department Distinguished from Public Works — Employment of Veterans. — A statute provided that veterans employed in the public works of any city should not be removed. Counsel contended that the term public works included public departments. The court said: "We cannot concur in this view. A 'public department' is defined as 'a division of official duties or functions; a branch of government; a distinct part of a governmental organization; as the legislative, executive, and judicial departments; the department of state, of the treasury, etc.' The term public works is defined as 'all fixed works constructed for public use, as railways, docks, canals, waterworks, roads, etc.'" Ellis v. Grand Rapids, 123 Mich. 567.

3. "Public Worship may mean the worship of God conducted and observed under public authority; or it may mean worship in an open or public place, without privacy or concealment; or it may mean the performance of religious exercises under a provision for an equal right in the whole public to participate in its benefits; or it may be used in contradistinction to worship in the family or the closet. In this country, what is called public worship is commonly conducted by voluntary societies, constituted according to their own notions of ecclesiastical authority and ritual propriety, opening their places of worship, and admitting to their religious services such persons, and upon such terms, and subject to such regulations, as they may choose to designate and establish. A church absolutely belonging to the public, and in which all persons without restriction have equal rights, such as the public enjoy in highways or public landings, is certainly a very rare institution, if such a thing can be found." Atty.-Gen. v. Merrimack Mfg. Co., 14 Gray (Mass.) 602.

Y. M. C. A. — In Young Men's Christian Assoc. v. New York, 113 N. Y. 190, it was said: "There is no ambiguity in the phrase public worship. It refers to the usual church services upon the Sabbath, open freely to the public, and in which any one may join." And in that case it was held that a building of the Young Men's Christian Association was not a place of public worship. See also Association, etc. v. New York, 104 N. Y. 581; People v. Neff, 34 N. Y. App. Div. 86.

other printed work, either for sale or for general distribution; ¹ to proclaim, to make known generally.² A publication is a something, as a book or print, which has been published — made public or known to the world.³

PUBLISHER. (See also the title COPYRIGHT, vol. 7, p. 508.)—A publisher is one who by himself or his agent makes a thing publicly known; one engaged in the circulation of books, pamphlets, and other papers.⁴

PUDDING.—Pudding is defined as flour or meal mixed with a variety of ingredients, and usually sweetened.⁵

PUEBLO. (See also the title SPANISH AND MEXICAN LAND GRANTS.)—The term pueblo in its original signification means people or population, but is used in the sense of the English word "town." It has the indefiniteness of that term, and, like it, is sometimes applied to a mere collection of individuals residing at a particular place, a settlement or village, as well as to a regularly organized municipality.⁶

PUFFER. (See also the titles AUCTIONS AND AUCTIONEERS, vol. 3, p. 487; JUDICIAL SALES, vol. 17, p. 948; SHERIFFS' SALES.)—A "puffer," in the strictest meaning of the word, is a person who, without having any intention to purchase, is employed by the vendor at an auction to raise the price by fictitious bids, thereby increasing competition among the bidders, while he himself is secured from risk by a secret understanding with the vendor that he shall not be bound by his bids.⁷

PUIS DARREIN CONTINUANCE. (See also the title PUIS DARREIN CONTINUANCE, 17 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 262.)—A pleading "puis darrein continuance," is one which sets up some matter or defense that has arisen after plea and before replication or after issue joined.⁸

PULL.—See note 9.

2. Watts v. Greenlee, 2 Dev. L. (13 N. Car.) 119.

"The primary meaning of the word publish is to make known." North Baptist Church v. Orange, 54 N. J. L. 116.

Form of Publication.—The schedule to the Illinois Constitution of 1870, § 18, provides: "All laws of the state of Illinois, and all official writings and the executive, legislative, and judicial proceedings, shall be conducted, preserved, and published in no other than the English language." In Chicago v. McCoy, 136 Ill. 352, the court, per Baker, J., said: "It is insisted that the word published, as used in said section of the constitution, is restricted in its application to publications in book or pamphlet form. The word published is broad enough to include, and in its ordinary and usual acceptance does include, publications in newspapers. * * * The constitutional provision in question contemplates publications in newspapers as well as publications in books and pamphlets."

Forgery. (See also the title FORGERY, vol. 13, p. 1081.)—In People v. Tomlinson, 35 Cal. 509, it was said: "The words 'utter' and publish, in the law of forgery, are synonymous, for the meaning of both is 'to declare or assert, directly or indirectly, by words or actions,' that the forged instrument is genuine."

3. Publication.—U. S. v. Loftis, 12 Fed. Rep. 671. See also U. S. v. Williams, 3 Fed. Rep. 486.

Same.—A Sealed Letter is a "writing," but it is not a publication within the statute aforesaid. U. S. v. Loftis, 12 Fed. Rep. 671; U. S. v. Mathias, 36 Fed. Rep. 896.

4. Publisher.—Bouv. L. Dict.

As to Whether a Publisher Is a Manufacturer, see MANUFACTURE, MANUFACTURER, MANUFACTURING, ETC., vol. 19, p. 925.

Publisher and Printer Synonymous.—See PRINT—PRINTER, ETC., vol. 22, p. 1297.

5. Pudding.—Clotworthy v. Schepp, 42 Fed. Rep. 63. In that case it was held, where a manufacturer of pudding used the trademark name of "puddine," that he could not enjoin another manufacturer of pudding from calling his goods pudding. See generally the title TRADEMARKS.

6. Trenouth v. San Francisco, 100 U. S. 251.

7. Puffer.—Peck v. List, 23 W. Va. 375, quoted in McMillan v. Harris, 110 Ga. 81. In the latter case the court said (p. 75): "A person of the character referred to is usually denominated a puffer, but he is sometimes referred to as a 'bybidder,' 'capper,' 'decoy duck,' 'white bonnet,' or 'sham bidder.'" It was held that where a bidder can be compelled to keep and pay for the property he is no puffer, although his bid was merely for the purpose of running up the price.

8. Puis Darrein Continuance.—1 Chitty on Pleadings (16th Am. ed.) 688; Chattanooga v. Neely, 97 Tenn. 529.

"A plea puis darrein continuance sets up some matter arising after plea pleaded." Towns v. Wilcox, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 504.

9. Possessed of Pull.—In Percival v. State, 45 Neb. 746, it was said: "The phrase 'possessed of a pull' is, to speak strictly, without an intelligible meaning, and is, in any event, so doubtful and uncertain that it cannot be ap-

PUNCTUAL — PUNCTUALLY. — See note 2.

PUNISH. (See also the title SENTENCE AND PUNISHMENT.) — The word "punish" is defined as to impose a penalty upon; to afflict with pain, loss, or suffering for a crime or fault; to inflict a penalty for an offense, upon the offender.³

PUNISHABLE. — If an offense may be punishable by a certain penalty it is punishable by such penalty, although, at the discretion of the court or under different circumstances, other penalties may be imposed. Its meaning is not restricted to such an offense as must be so punished.⁴

PUNISHMENT. — See the title SENTENCE AND PUNISHMENT.

PUNITIVE DAMAGES. (See also the title EXEMPLARY DAMAGES, vol. 12, p. 2.) — The terms "exemplary," "punitive," or "vindictive" damages are synonymous in their legal signification.⁵

plied as imputing that the court was corrupt, as is claimed in the complaint, with any greater certainty than it may be said to refer to some other person or persons, or to actions or motives erroneous and improper, but not corrupt."

1. Pulsatory Currents. — See Telephone Cases, 126 U. S. 531.

2. Payment. — In Norris v. Beaty, 6 W. Va. 480, it was said: "The meaning of the word punctual is 'exact,' and, as applied to payment, means the exact time at which the payment is to be made."

A mortgage deed contained an agreement that the payment of the principal should not be required until the expiration of three years, if in the meantime every half-yearly payment of interest should be punctually paid. It was held that payment punctually meant payment on the day fixed for payment, and that payment nine days after such fixed day was not sufficient. Leeds, etc., Theatre v. Broadbent, (1898) 1 Ch. 346, 77 L. T. N. S. 665.

3. Punish. — Bradley v. State, 111 Ga. 172, quoting Webst. Dict.

"Punished" Distinguished from "Convicted." — A California statute declared that a defendant guilty of certain acts outside of the state should "be convicted and punished in the same manner as if such larceny or receiving had been committed in this state." In construing this statute the court said: "The word punished, as used in the section, refers plainly to the penalty to be affixed to the crime, but the word 'convicted' is much broader in meaning. And when the statute says 'convicted as if such larceny * * * had been committed in this state,' the word 'convicted' includes the accusation and the trial." People v. Black, 122 Cal. 73.

4. Liable to Punishment. — U. S. v. Watkins, 7 Sawy. (U. S.) 94; State v. Neuner, 49 Conn. 233; Miller v. State, 58 Ga. 200; People v. Murphy, 185 Ill. 626; McLaughlin's Case, 107 Mass. 225; Com. v. Pemberton, 118 Mass. 36; State v. Shattuck, 45 N. H. 210; People v. Keating, 61 Hun (N. Y.) 263; Dall v. People, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 91; People v. Hughes, 137 N.

Y. 29; Benton v. Com., 89 Va. 570; Aldridge v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 452.

In In re Mills, 135 U. S. 263, the words "punishable by imprisonment at hard labor" employed in Act Cong. March 1, 1889, defining the criminal jurisdiction of a United States court in the Indian Territory, were interpreted to embrace offenses which, although not imperatively required by statute to be so punished, might be punished in that manner.

In U. S. v. Watkins, 7 Sawy. (U. S.) 85, 6 Fed. Rep. 152, the court, by Deady, J., said: "It [a crime] is punished by the punishment actually imposed, but it is punishable by any punishment that the law authorizes the court to impose. The phrase 'is punishable' cannot be construed to mean more or less than 'may be punished' or 'liable to be punished.'"

But in Hicks v. State, 150 Ind. 293, it was held that the word punishable, in an act relating to felonies punishable by confinement in the state prison, applied only to such crimes as were actually so punishable, and not to such as might be punishable by such confinement.

5. Punitive Damages. — Brown v. Evans, 17 Fed. Rep. 913; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Kelly, 100 Ky. 421; Hamilton v. Third Ave. R. Co., 53 N. Y. 28; Moore v. Ohio River R. Co., 41 W. Va. 160.

In Kadgin v. Miller, 13 Ill. App. 476, it was said: "It will be noticed that the instruction makes use of the words punitive damages, while the words of the statute are 'exemplary damages,' but they are convertible terms and mean the same thing."

Punitive Damages Equivalent to Smart Money. — Vinson v. Flynn, 64 Ark. 453; Titus v. Corkins, 21 Kan. 723.

Compensation. — Punitive damages are damages beyond mere compensation. Holmes v. Jones, 147 N. Y. 59.

In Chiles v. Drake, 2 Met. (Ky.) 147, it was held that the term punitive damages, in a statute allowing a civil action by the personal representative of one killed by the wilful neglect of another, did not exclude the idea of damages by way of compensation.

NOTICE, post; RECORDING ACTS. And see ASSIGNS, vol. 3, p. 156; PURCHASE MONEY, post.) — A purchase, in the ordinary and popular acceptance of the term, is the transmission of property from one person to another by their voluntary act and agreement, founded on a valuable consideration.¹ In its

1. Popular Sense. — 4 Kent's Com. 441; Martin v. Strachan, 1 Wils. C. Pl. 2, 66; Ex p. Hillman, 10 Ch. D. 622; Kohl v. U. S., 91 U. S. 367; Enterprise v. Smith, 62 Kan. 815; Downing v. Marshall, 23 N. Y. 389; Fullenwider v. Roberts, 4 Dev. & B. L. (20 N. Car.) 283; Maydwell v. Maydwell, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 577; Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Prindle, 82 Va. 129.

The word purchase applies only to such grants of real estate as are obtained for money or some other valuable consideration. Ten Eyck v. Witbeck, 135 N. Y. 44.

A statute provided that it should be lawful for any trade union registered under the act to purchase or take upon lease any land not exceeding one acre. It was held that the word purchase was used in its ordinary sense of "buy for money," and not in its technical sense of "acquire otherwise than by descent or escheat." In re Amos, (1891) 3 Ch. 159.

Consideration. — In this popular sense the term has been held to import a consideration. Second Ward Sav. Bank v. Huron, 80 Fed. Rep. 660; Varwig v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., 54 Ohio St. 455; and see the cases cited throughout this note.

But that where used technically the term does not import a consideration, see Hastings v. Kellogg, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 36 S. W. Rep. 824; Roberts v. Shroyer, 68 Ind. 68; and the cases in the succeeding note.

Bona Fide Purchaser. — In Cummings v. Coleman, 7 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 509, 62 Am. Dec. 402, it was held that the term purchaser, in a statute making parol gifts void as to creditors, purchasers, and mortgagees, without sufficient change of possession, meant a purchaser for money or other valuable consideration.

Declaration — Payment of the Price. — A declaration alleged that the plaintiff bargained with the defendants to buy of them certain pieces of land; that the said land was described in a deed from the defendants to the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff purchased of the defendants the land described in the said deed. It was held, on motion in arrest, that the presumption was that these allegations were proved on the trial, and that the word purchase, as used in the declaration, implied a payment of the price. Curtis v. Burdick, 48 Vt. 166.

Dower. — A New York statute of March 26, 1802, enacted that "all purchases of land made or to be made by any alien or aliens who have come to this state and become inhabitants thereof shall be deemed valid to vest the estates to them granted," etc. And a later statute (April 8, 1808) enacted that all persons authorized by it or by the statute first cited to acquire real estate by purchase might also take and acquire by devise or descent. In Priest v. Cummings, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 356, Verplank, Senator, said: "It seems to me evident that the manner in which the word purchase is used in the Act of 1802 shows that it is not used in its peculiar real-estate sense, but in its ordinary and habitual one. 'All purchases of land made' can only mean all lands bought. This use of the word is not colloquial or vulgar (as it has been called by Jacobs and other compilers), but may be found in the written opinions of Hardwicke and Kent, and might well be used in legislative enactments." Accordingly it was held that title by dower does not come within the meaning of the phrase "purchases of land," as used in the statute, and that an alien could not hold lands thus acquired. And see the same opinion for authorities in support of the view that title by dower does not come within the technical meaning of the word purchase.

Homestead. — A homestead statute provided that the homestead exemption should not apply if the debt or liability in suit existed prior to the purchase of the land. In construing this statute in Moseley v. Bevins, 91 Ky. 261, the court said: "The word [purchase] was intended to be understood and applied in the sense of acquisition of a homestead by fully paying for it." See also Morehead v. Morehead, (Ky. 1894) 25 S. W. Rep. 750.

Indian Lands. — A Wisconsin statute (now Stat. Wis. 1898, § 1038, subd. 7) exempts from taxation "the property of Indians who are not citizens, except lands held by them by purchase." In Farrington v. Wilson, 29 Wis. 383, the plaintiff claimed through a half-breed who had received a patent of the lands from the United States. The defendant set up a tax deed. It was held that the word purchase, as used in the exemption, is to be taken to mean an acquisition of land for a valuable consideration; and that land patented by the United States to an Indian was not held by purchase within the meaning of the provision.

Purchaser Distinguished from Bona Fide Purchaser. — See Hastings v. Kellogg, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 36 S. W. Rep. 824.

Purchase by Discount. — See Nicholson v. National Bank, 92 Ky. 255, and the title NATIONAL BANKS, vol. 21, p. 319. And see DISCOUNT, vol. 9, p. 468.

Distinguished from Barter. — To purchase means "to buy; to obtain property by paying an equivalent in money; it differs from barter only in the circumstance that in purchasing the price or equivalent given or secured is money." Webst. Dict., followed in Hoyt v. Van Alstyne, 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 572.

Factor. — In Armstrong v. Walker, 9 Lea (Tenn.) 156, it was held that a factor who sold cotton for a tenant and appropriated the proceeds to a debt due to him, by consent or direction of the tenant, and with knowledge that his debtor was a tenant, was not liable to the landlord who had a lien for rent upon the cotton. The factor is not a purchaser, but a seller, and was not liable to the landlord under the statute as a purchaser.

Subpurchaser. — An Alabama statute provided that after confirmation of a sale made under authority of the Probate Court, "when the purchaser has paid the whole of the purchase- strictly technical sense, "purchase" is the acquisition of land by any lawful act of the party in contradistinction to acquisition by operation of law, and it includes title by deed, title by matter of record, and title by devise.¹ In other words, the term includes every mode of taking title except by descent or inheritance.²

money, on his application, or that of his executor or administrator, the court must order a conveyance to be made to such purchaser." It was held that the word purchaser must be construed to mean the original vendee or buyer, who acquired by bid, at an authorized sale, an estate in the lands sold, and that it did not include a subpurchaser or one who held under him by transfer, sale, or release. Anderson v. Bradley, 66 Ala. 265.

Trust. — A United States statute (Rev. Stat. U. S., § 3736) provides that "no land shall be purchased on account of the United States, except under a law authorizing such purchase." A conveyance of land to trustees to sell as much thereof as might be necessary to raise sufficient money to pay a debt due to the United States was held not to be a purchase by the United States within the meaning of the statute. Neilson v. Lagow, 12 How. (U. S.) 98.

Retirement of Stock. — Where a building association authorized the purchase, so called, but in fact the cancellation and retirement, of such shares of stock as could be had at a premium of twenty per cent. on the amount paid in, it was held that the transaction was not a purchase in the correct sense of that term. Wangerien v. Aspell, 47 Ohio St. 258.

Consolidation. — In Continental Trust Co. v. Toledo, etc., R. Co., 82 Fed. Rep. 652, where a statute authorized certain railroad companies to purchase the franchises of other railroad companies, the court said: "Although this act uses the word purchase, it plainly contemplates consolidation." See also Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ashling, 56 Ill. App. 327.

Choses in Action. — The acquisition of choses in action for a valuable consideration is a purchase. Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Prindle, 82 Va. 129; Williams v. Lord, 75 Va. 390.

Purchase and Sale. (See also the title SALES.) — In Coles v. Perry, 7 Tex. 135, it was said: "The words 'purchase and sale' are correlative and denote a contract in which two individuals agree the one to give to the other a certain thing for a determinate price."

Executory or Executed Contract. — The words "sale and purchase" imply an executed sale. Hessel v. Johnson, 70 Wis. 539.

In Stevens Point First Nat. Bank v. Chafee, 98 Wis. 42, it was held that an executory contract for the sale of land was not a purchase.

In Gilpin v. Davis, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 416, 5 Am. Dec. 622, it was held that a purchaser meant one who had acquired a legal title and not merely one who held a bond for a conveyance.

Real-estate Brokers. (See also the title REAL-ESTATE BROKERS, post.) — In Mattingly v. Pennie, 105 Cal. 519, it was said: "The readiness and willingness of a person to purchase the property can be shown only by an offer on his part to purchase; and unless he has actually entered into a contract binding him to purchase, or has offered to the vendor, and not merely to the broker, to enter into such a contract, he cannot be considered a purchaser." See also Viaux v. Old South Soc., 133 Mass. 1.

Purchase in Sense of Acquiring by Contract or Consent of Another. — See Montgomery, etc., R. Co. v. Branch, 59 Ala. 152.

Play. — In Sanger v. French, 157 N. Y. 213, it was said: "It seems that the word purchase, when applied to a play, means that a party has acquired from the author or owner the right to use it, upon payment of a stipulated royalty."

Credit. — A statute empowered married women to acquire personal property by grant or purchase. It was held that this purchase might be made by any of the ordinary modes known to the law or to the course of business; that it might be made by the payment of cash for the property purchased, or the sale might be on the married woman's credit. Abbey v. Deyo, 44 Barb. (N. Y.) 374, affirmed 44 N. Y. 343. To the same effect see Dayton v. Walsh, 47 Wis. 113, and see generally the title SEPARATE PROPERTY OF MARRIED WOMEN.

Power to Purchase — Liquidated Damages. — In Half v. O'Connor, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 197, it was held that where an agent was authorized to purchase certain property he was empowered to stipulate for liquidated damages in the event of the breach of the contract on the part of the vendee. The court said: "We insist that this stipulation for liquidated damages is a mere term of the purchase which was authorized." See also the title AGENCY, vol. I, p. 1020.

Creditors Held Not to Be Purchasers. — See Hutchinson v. Michigan City First Nat. Bank, 133 Ind. 271.

Judgment Creditor. — Nor is a judgment creditor a purchaser. Den v. Richman, 13 N. J. L. 55; Heister v. Fortner, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 46; Kaufelt v. Bower, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 83; Cover v. Black, 1 Pa. St. 493; Gillespie v. Van Egmond, 6 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 533.

In Brace v. Marlborough, 2 P. Wms. 491, the master of the rolls said: "One cannot call a judgment, etc., creditor a purchaser."

Purchase in Sense of Acquisition — Homestead Statute. — In In re Duerson, 13 Nat. Bank. Reg. 188, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 4,117, it was said: "The statute disallows the exemption of a homestead against debts contracted before the purchase of the land or the erection of the improvements thereon. I think the word purchase, as used in the context, is synonymous with the word 'acquisition.' In this case the land was not purchased, but acquired by descent."

Methods of Acquiring Title by Purchase. — There are six ways of acquiring a title by purchase, namely: by deed; by devise; by execution; by prescription; by possession or occupancy; by escheat.¹ There is yet another sense in which Virginia. — Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Prindle, 82 Va. 129.

"Purchase, indeed, in its vulgar and confined acceptation, is applied only to such acquisitions of land as are obtained by way of bargain and sale for money or some other valuable consideration; but this falls far short of the legal idea of purchase." 2 Black. Com. 241, quoted in Grant v. Bennett, 96 Ill. 535, per Dickey, C. J., dissenting.

Purchase or Otherwise. — A provision in the charter of a corporation enabled it to take land "by direct purchase or otherwise." In construing this charter in Downing v. Marshall, 23 N. Y. 388, the court said: "When the legislature, in granting this charter, said that real estate might be acquired by purchase or otherwise, I see no reason to doubt that all the modes known to the law were intended."

Proceeds of Property Obtained by Descent. — In Orr v. White, 106 Ind. 341, it was held that where real estate inherited from an ancestor is sold, and with the proceeds and accumulated interest other property is purchased, the latter is acquired by purchase and not by descent. Compare Gregory v. Van Voorst, 85 Ind. 108.

Leasehold. — In Hackett v. Emporium School Dist., 150 Pa. St. 226, it was said: "A lessee is a purchaser as truly as he who becomes grantee in fee. The difference is in the estate acquired." And in that case it was held that an authority to purchase ground for a school building authorized the leasing of ground for such a purpose.

And that the term purchase is appropriate to a lease, see Smoot v. Lecatt, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 598; Spielmann v. Kliet, 36 N. J. Eq. 199.

Voluntary Conveyance to Son. — In Clay v. Wyatt, 6 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 583, the plaintiffs brought ejectment against the defendant for various tracts of land in his possession which had been deeded to the plaintiffs by their father in consideration of one hundred dollars and natural love and affection. The only question presented to the court was whether the deed from the plaintiffs' father was void under the Kentucky Act of 1824, "to revive and amend the law relative to champerty and maintenance, and more effectually to secure the bona fide occupants of land." It was contended on the part of the plaintiffs that the legislature used the word purchase in its popular and not in its technical sense. The court, per Underwood, J., said: "The policy of the act requires that we should give to the word purchase, as used in the act, its technical meaning. Besides, the exception in favor of devisees shows that the legislature so intended. That exception excludes all other exceptions, and hence a voluntary conveyance to a son cannot be admitted as an exception."

Widow. — In McMakin v. Michaels, 23 Ind. 462, it was held that where a widow purchased land of which her husband died seized, at a commissioner's sale, under proceedings instituted for partition, she stands in the same condition with respect to the sale as a stranger, and takes the land by purchase and not by descent.

Foreclosure of Mortgage — Quitclaim. — In Cornett v. Hough, 136 Ind. 389, it was held, where a widow obtained land by the foreclosure of a mortgage which came to her by will from her husband or by a quitclaim deed in satisfaction of such mortgage, that she obtained the land by purchase and not by gift, devise, or descent.

Holder of Quitclaim Deed. — A Nebraska statute defined the term purchaser as embracing "every person to whom any real estate or interest therein shall be conveyed for a valuable consideration." It was held that a grantee under a quitclaim deed was a purchaser. Schott v. Dosh, 49 Neb. 195.

1. Methods of Acquiring Title by Purchase. — Bouv. L. Dict. And see Spielmann v. Kliet, 36 N. J. Eq. 203.

Sheriff's Sale. — Purchaser held to include a purchaser at a sheriff's sale, see Burt v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 106 Mass. 364; Draper v. Bryson, 26 Mo. 108; Kauffelt v. Bower, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 82.

Devise. — In its broad and technical sense the term purchase includes a devise. Bennett v. Hibbett, 88 Iowa 156; Stamm v. Bostwick, 40 Hun (N. Y.) 35, affirmed 122 N. Y. 48. These cases arose upon the construction of a statute forbidding aliens to acquire land by purchase. See also Allen v. Bland, 134 Ind. 78.

But where an act incorporating a corporation authorized it to take by purchase, it was held that the term purchase should be taken in its popular sense, and not in its broadest legal sense so as to include a devise. McCartee v. Orphan Asylum Soc., 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 507, 18 Am. Dec. 516. See the dissenting opinions in this case for an exhaustive citation of authorities in support of the technical meaning of the word purchase.

A statute provided that it should be lawful for any widow entitled to dower in any lands of which her husband died seized, or for any heir or heirs, or guardian of any minor child or children entitled to any estate in the said lands, or for any purchaser thereof, to apply to the Orphans' Court for the appointment of commissioners to assign dower. In construing this provision the court said: "The omission of devisees in this act shows, as we must infer, that the legislature were aware of the embarrassments which would be produced by extending that act to devisees. They are many, and would be very perplexing, and in view of them I cannot suppose that the word purchaser, in the late act, was intended to include devisees." Matter of Hopper, 6 N. J. Eq. 327. See also Chesapeake, etc., Canal Co. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 4 Gill & J. (Md.) 153.

PURCHASE MONEY. (See also the titles HOMESTEAD, vol. 15, p. 516; PURCHASE-MONEY MORTGAGES, post; VENDOR AND PURCHASER. And see PURCHASE — PURCHASER, ante.) — Purchase money is the money agreed to be paid by the purchaser for property;² the consideration money paid or agreed to be paid to the vendor by the vendee of realty.³

Rev. Stat. Iowa (1860), § 2488, provided that aliens having certain qualifications should have the right to acquire "real estate by descent or by purchase." The next section conferred upon every alien the right to acquire real estate by devise or descent, but not by purchase. In view of these provisions and that in the following section providing for more limited rights for aliens acquiring real estate by purchase, and in order to give every section of the statute some practical effect, it was held, in Purcell v. Smidt, 21 Iowa 546, that the word purchase, as used in section 2488, must receive its "more limited or common signification, to wit, that of acquisition by bargain and sale for a consideration."

Eminent Domain. — In Kohl v. U. S., 91 U. S. 374, the meaning of the word purchase, as used in a statute providing for the condemnation of property, was considered. The court said: "It is true, the words 'to purchase' might be construed as including the power to acquire by condemnation; for, technically, purchase includes all modes of acquisition other than that of descent. But generally, in statutes as in common use, the word is employed in a sense not technical, only as meaning acquisition by contract between the parties without governmental interference." To the same effect see Enterprise v. Smith, 62 Kan. 815.

In Burt v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 106 Mass. 364, it was said: "And it includes titles obtained by exercise of the right of eminent domain. If a statute authorizes the appraisal by a jury, and vests the title upon payment or tender of the amount of the verdict, with costs, the property is held under a statute conveyance, and the title is, in legal phrase, by purchase."

I. DEFINITION AND SCOPE OF TITLE. — A purchase-money mortgage is one given to secure unpaid purchase money. While in most respects it is like other mortgages, it differs from them in a few particulars, and it is only such distinctive characteristics that are discussed in this title.¹ It is not necessary that a purchase-money mortgage should show upon its face that it was given to secure purchase money if proof aliter that it was so given or understood by the parties can be adduced.² A false recital in a mortgage that it was given for purchase money does not estop the assignee of a judgment entered on the same day from proving that it was not a purchase-money mortgage.³

Purchase-money Chattel Mortgages. — While a purchase-money mortgage is ordinarily a mortgage of real estate, the term has occasionally been extended to chattel mortgages.⁴

Mortgage to Lender of Purchase Money. — As a general rule, a mortgage given to secure purchase money is none the less a purchase-money mortgage because executed to one who lends the purchase money rather than to the vendor of the property.⁵ This rule, however, is not of universal acceptance. In

Where B, a vendee, assigns his contract to C, and the vendor makes title to C, taking from him a mortgage for the whole of the purchase money due from B, and at the same time another mortgage, recited to be for purchase money, which he assigns to B, the latter, as between C and the vendor, is not a purchase-money mortgage. *Dungan v. Pennsylvania it is held that a purchase-money mortgage can be given to another than the vendor only by the vendor's agreement and authority, for the reason that only the vendor and those representing him have any title to the purchase money.¹ However, in this state the vendee's mortgagee is entitled to the proceeds of a sale of mortgaged premises in preference to lien creditors whose contracts were made on the security of an equitable interest only.² In Maryland and Ohio a contrary rule is also adopted, but the decisions in those states are based upon statutes which limit the preference of purchase-money mortgages to those executed to the vendor.³

Mortgage Substituted for Purchase-money Mortgage. — Where one indebted by bond and mortgage for purchase money borrows money and pays the debt, a mortgage to the lender is not a substitute for the first or discharged mortgage, and does not rank as a purchase-money mortgage.⁴

II. PRIORITY OVER OTHER LIENS — 1. In General. — The distinctive and important characteristic of a purchase-money mortgage is the precedence allowed to it, both at common law and by statute, over other mortgages, judgments, mechanics' liens, and other claims to which ordinary mortgages would usually be postponed. In the United States the priority of mortgages is determined by the recording acts, whose effect is to give precedence to the instrument first recorded. To this rule purchase-money mortgages constitute, to a certain extent, an exception, as they do also to the general rule that gives precedence to judgments, mechanics' liens, and homestead and dower rights.⁵

2. Over Other Mortgages. — A purchase-money mortgage executed at the same time with the deed of purchase takes precedence over any other mortgage by the same mortgagor, and the second mortgagee cannot, by having his mortgage recorded first, acquire a priority over the purchase-money mortgage.⁶

But as Between a Mortgage to the Vendor and One to a Lender of a part of the purchase money, it has been held that no priority can be given to either. Higgins v. Dennis, 104 Iowa 605. Nor does the fact that two such mortgages become due at different times give priority to that first maturing. Collerd v. Huson, 34 N. J. Eq. 38.

Where two mortgages were given at the same time for purchase money, and the mortgagor attempted to effect a secret intention of

Title of Purchaser at Foreclosure Sale. — As a consequence, a purchaser at a foreclosure sale under a purchase-money mortgage takes title free from the lien of another mortgage given to secure borrowed purchase money.¹

Mortgage by Mortgagor with Bond for Title. — Precedence is likewise given to a purchase-money mortgage executed after a mortgage from a person having no other title than that implied in a bond for title from his vendor.²

Mortgage to Cover After-acquired Property. — A railroad mortgage given to cover after-acquired property is subordinate to a junior mortgage given to secure purchase money, whether such junior mortgage is or is not registered.³

Mortgage for Roadbed Prior to One to Secure Bonds. — Likewise, a mortgage given by a railroad corporation for land purchased for its roadbed takes precedence over a prior general mortgage to trustees to secure corporate bonds.⁴

Rights of Assignee of Junior Mortgage. — A mortgage made by the purchase-money mortgagor subsequently to an unrecorded purchase-money mortgage does not take precedence of the latter although transferred to one who is ignorant of the existence of the purchase-money mortgage.⁵

3. Over Prior Judgments. — A mortgage given for the purchase money of land and executed at the same time when the deed is executed to the mortgagor takes precedence of a prior judgment against the mortgagor.⁶

Knowledge of Existence of Mortgage. — In at least one state the priority of a purchase-money mortgage executed before but not recorded until after the entry of a judgment against the mortgagor depends upon the actual knowledge of such mortgage on the part of the judgment creditor before the debt was contracted for which the judgment was obtained.⁷

In Kansas the fact that a mortgage is given for purchase money does not place it outside the provisions of the registry act or give to it a priority to which it would not be entitled under such act.⁸

A Deed to Secure Borrowed Money Paid for Land is but a parol mortgage, and as such is inferior to a judgment against the purchaser, and a sheriff's sale under the judgment will pass a clear title. The money having been lent to the purchaser, any surplus left after satisfying the judgment belongs to him, and not to the lender.⁹

giving priority to one of them by delivering it first to be recorded, it was held that such delivery would not have the desired effect, and that the two should be paid pro rata. Koevenig v. Schmitz, 71 Iowa 175.

But as between two purchase-money mortgages, priority is sometimes given to that one first placed on record. Corning v. Murray, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 652.

But where one purchase-money mortgage was surrendered and marked satisfied, and one taken in place of it was, through the neglect of the mortgagee's agent, not placed on record, it was held that a second mortgage of the same mortgagor, duly recorded, although given without consideration, took priority in the hands of a bona fide purchaser for value and without notice over the unrecorded purchase-money mortgage, the purchase-money mortgagee being estopped by the satisfaction of record of the first mortgage. Ramsey v. Jones, 41 Ohio St. 685.

Mortgage in Part for Purchase Money. — A mortgage given partly to secure purchase money and partly as security for a prior debt may be superior to a prior judgment as to the former portion and inferior as to the latter.¹

Statute Strictly Construed. — A statute giving priority to purchase-money mortgages over prior judgments does not include by implication other liens than judgments.²

Mortgage for Borrowed Money. — Where the money paid for land is a simple loan and there is no obligation on the part of the mortgagee to pay the debt, and no arrangement by which the lender should be subrogated to the rights of the vendor, a mortgage given by the vendee to the lender to secure the loan does not rank superior to a judgment rendered against the vendee prior to the purchase.³

Mortgage by One Codefendant to Another. — When property is bound by a judgment against two codefendants, and one codefendant sells to the other, taking back a purchase-money mortgage, such mortgage will not rank prior to the judgment. The property is bound by the judgment in the hands of the purchasing codefendant after as well as before such sale.⁴

4. Over Mechanics' Liens. — A purchase-money mortgage given by a vendee to a vendor simultaneously with the delivery of the deed will take precedence of a mechanics' lien claim for work done for the vendee before he acquired legal title.⁵

Claim to Insurance Money. — Likewise, a purchase-money mortgage on property destroyed will give a claim to insurance money prior to that of a mechanics' lien.⁶

5. Over Homestead Exemptions. — The subordination of homestead exemptions to purchase-money mortgages is fully discussed elsewhere.⁷

6. Over Dower. — The superiority of purchase-money mortgages to the widow's dower is discussed in another title.⁸

7. Priority by Agreement. — If Two Purchase-money Mortgages Be Taken for the same property, one of them may be assigned under an agreement that it shall take precedence over the other, and to such agreement effect will be given by the courts.⁹

A New Mortgage May, by Mutual Agreement, Be Substituted for the purchase-money mortgage, in which case equity will treat the substituted mortgage as continuing to the mortgagee all the rights enjoyed under the original mortgage.¹⁰

sumed when the second mortgage is drawn merely for the purpose of giving a more accurate description of the property mortgaged.¹

Evidence of Waiver. — It seems that in some jurisdictions the waiver must be incorporated in the mortgage.²

III. DOCTRINE OF INSTANTANEOUS SEIZIN. — The priority of the purchase-money mortgage to other liens created before the execution of the mortgage rests upon the doctrine that the deed from the vendor and the mortgage by the vendee are parts of one single and entire transaction. Because the seizin of the vendee is thus instantaneous, the title to the land does not for a single moment rest in him, but merely passes through him and vests in the mortgagee without stopping beneficially in the purchaser, and during such instantaneous passage the prior lien cannot attach to the title.³

Recital as to Date. — A recital in the mortgage as to the date of delivery is not conclusive, but parol evidence is admissible to show that deed and mortgage were delivered on the same day.⁴

Inference from Time of Making Mortgage. — The fact that the purchaser mortgaged the land on the same day upon which he received the conveyance is not alone enough to show that the two acts were parts of one and the same transaction, making the seizin instantaneous.⁵

Meaning of Doctrine. — Although the doctrine has been at times laid down in somewhat narrow terms, it has received in practice quite a liberal interpretation. Time is less an element than intention. It has been remarked that it is really impossible to execute the two instruments contemporaneously, and that all that is necessary is that the two transactions shall be intended to operate as parts of a single act.⁶

Vendor's Lien as Basis of Rule. — The rule has also been based upon other principles. It has been argued that the vendor's lien for unpaid purchase money would be good against prior creditors of the vendee, and that the taking of a mortgage subsequently to the conveyance should not place the vendor in a worse condition than he would be in if he had relied upon his implied lien.⁷

Wisconsin. — Jones v. Parker, 51 Wis. 218.

A debtor who owned property subject to a mortgage and to a life interest had the life interest conveyed to him in order to permit him to make another mortgage to secure money borrowed to pay off the first. All these acts were done as parts of one transaction. It was held that the debtor's seizin of the life interest was instantaneous and that an attaching creditor had no claim against it. Hazleton v. Lesure, 9 Allen (Mass.) 24.

of land does not lose his vendor's lien by taking a purchase-money mortgage,¹ and hence if the mortgage be void the vendor may still rely upon his equitable lien for the purchase money.²

And One Who Advances Purchase Money may not be subrogated to the rights of the vendor when to do so would defeat the latter's equitable lien.³ But a suit to foreclose a purchase-money mortgage and one to enforce a vendor's lien are different proceedings.⁴

I. SCOPE OF TITLE AND METHOD OF TREATMENT. — The object of this title is to give a general treatment of what is known as the doctrine of bona fide purchaser. The subject will be considered primarily as a branch of equity jurisprudence, and the discussion will be confined as far as practicable to statements of the principles of equity upon which a purchaser of real property is allowed protection against legal or equitable rights of others prior to his own in point of time, and conversely, of course, of those principles upon which such protection is refused. All matters which from their nature are not of equitable cognizance will be treated here only in so far as necessary to a proper understanding of the topic in hand. Thus, matters involving the construction and effect of the recording or registry acts, although generally these statutes are construed in accordance with the equitable principles applicable to bona fide purchasers, will be omitted and relegated to another title where specific treatment of them will be found. Likewise the subject of bona fide purchasers of property conveyed by reason of fraud and deceit, and of property conveyed in fraud of creditors or subsequent purchasers, will not be treated here; full discussion of these matters having already appeared elsewhere in this work.¹

II. INTRODUCTORY STATEMENT. — The principle underlying this branch of equity jurisprudence is that in order to deprive a purchaser of any legal estate, right, or advantage, it must appear that his course in obtaining it was unconscientious; and hence, when once a purchaser has established his position as a purchaser for value and without notice of any equitable claim or right affecting the estate, a court of equity can attach no demand upon his conscience, and therefore will not exercise its jurisdiction against him.² And a further reason for the refusal of the court to proceed against him is that he has acquired the legal title; for although the claimant under the prior equity may be rightfully entitled to the relief that he seeks, yet the purchaser, having in all good faith changed his position for the worse in reliance upon the soundness of the title he was purchasing, is equally entitled to the protection of the court, and in such a case the court applies the maxim that "where the equities are equal the law will prevail."³ It has been said of one claiming to be a purchaser for value and without notice that "no party can occupy a higher ground than that in a court of equity; and if he can maintain that position his title is established and his position impregnable."⁴ But the doctrine of bona fide purchase as applied in courts of equity is not a rule of property; it is used neither to enforce a positive right nor to determine the question of title between the contesting parties; in its most frequent application it is but "a shield in the hands of a defendant" to protect him against his adversary.¹ The few instances in which it is a ground for affirmative relief are discussed in another part of this title.²

III. DEFINITION AND GENERAL CONSIDERATION — 1. Definition. — As the term is used and understood in courts of equity, a purchaser for value and without notice, or, as he is frequently called, a bona fide purchaser, may be defined as a purchaser of land who takes a conveyance purporting to pass the entire title, legal and equitable, gives therefor a valuable consideration, and has neither actual nor constructive notice of any equitable rights of other persons in conflict with the title that his deed purports to convey.³

2. Persons Entitled to Protection — a. IN GENERAL. — By the term "purchaser," as used throughout this title, is meant primarily one who acquires by purchase an absolute and entire fee-simple estate in lands, as distinguished from one who takes a mere equitable title or the legal estate by way of security. But, as will presently be shown, others than purchasers of the entire fee may be entitled to protection in equity.

b. MORTGAGEE. — It is well settled that a mortgagee who takes his mortgage for value and without notice of prior equities occupies the position of a bona fide purchaser and is entitled to the protection afforded to such a purchaser by a court of equity; a mortgage being deemed a purchase to the extent of the debt secured thereby.⁴

c. ASSIGNEE OF MORTGAGE. — One who takes an assignment of a mortgage for value and without notice of outstanding equities is entitled to protection as a bona fide purchaser.⁵

notice "is an absolute, unqualified, unanswerable defense, and an unanswerable plea to the jurisdiction of this court." Pilcher v. Rawlins, L. R. 7 Ch. 268, per Sir W. M. James, L. J.

Though expressions of judicial opinion may be found to the effect that as against a purchaser for value and without notice a court of equity has no jurisdiction, the true theory is not that the court lacks jurisdiction in the premises, but simply that it will not exercise the jurisdiction which it undoubtedly possesses. Jones v. Zollicoffer, Term (4 N. Car.) 212.

d. TRUSTEE AND CESTUI QUE TRUST IN TRUST DEED. — The grantee and the cestui que trust under a trust deed of land, if the conveyance is based upon a valuable consideration and is taken without notice, are recognized in equity as purchasers entitled to protection against prior equitable rights.¹

e. ASSIGNEE AND CREDITORS UNDER GENERAL ASSIGNMENT. — It is generally held that the assignee and creditors under a general assignment for the benefit of creditors do not occupy the position of purchasers for value and without notice, but take subject to equities that would have been enforceable against the land while owned by the debtor.²

f. LESSEE OR PURCHASER OF LEASEHOLD ESTATE. — A lessee or a purchaser of a leasehold estate who takes for value and without notice of prior equities is entitled to protection as a bona fide purchaser.³

g. PURCHASER UNDER QUITCLAIM DEED. — As a general rule, the grantee in a quitclaim deed is not accorded the favored position of a bona fide purchaser, for the reason that the deed purports to convey only whatever title the grantor may have, and thus the terms of the deed itself afford constructive notice of any defects or equities by which the title may be impaired.⁴

h. PURCHASER WITH NOTICE FROM BONA FIDE PURCHASER — (1) General Rule. — It is well settled that where an estate has once come into the ownership of a purchaser for value and without notice, it is thereupon discharged from prior equities, and the purchaser may transfer the property free therefrom, even to one who has notice of them, and they do not revive or re-attach themselves to the estate in his hands. In other words, a bona fide purchaser of a title affected by equities may give a clear and perfect title to a purchaser with notice; the reasons being that otherwise there would be great difficulty in alienating the property for a fair value, and that the capacity to hold and enjoy must give rise to a capacity to convey.⁵

(2) Exceptions and Limitations — Purchase by Former Owner. — The foregoing rule, however, is not without qualifications. The estate in the hands of a bona fide purchaser is freed from equities so far as concerns him and subsequent grantees who previous to his purchase have not had any interest in the affected property; but when by mesne conveyances the title becomes vested in a former owner in whose hands it was originally subject to the equities, they revive and re-attach to the estate.¹

Immediate Grantor Not a Bona Fide Purchaser. — In order that a purchaser with notice from a bona fide purchaser may be entitled to protection, his grantor must in all particulars have occupied the position of a purchaser for value and without notice.² So, if the grantor paid no value, but was a mere volunteer,³ or had nothing more than an equitable title to pass by the sale,⁴ his purchaser with notice will not be protected.

2. BONA FIDE PURCHASER FROM PURCHASER WITH NOTICE. — Inasmuch as a purchaser for value is protected from prior equities of which he had no notice, it is a settled rule that he takes the estate free from such equities, even though his grantor was fixed with notice. In other words, a purchaser for value and without notice is not affected by notice in his grantor.⁵

j. PURCHASER OF EQUITABLE TITLE. — As a general rule, the purchaser of an equitable, as distinguished from a legal, title will not be afforded protection as a bona fide purchaser, as against the holder of a prior equity; the rule between holders of equitable rights in land being that the prior in point of time will prevail.¹

IV. ESSENTIAL ELEMENTS OF BONA FIDE PURCHASE — 1. General Principle. — It may be stated as a general rule that in order to entitle a person to protection on the ground that he is a purchaser for value and without notice, he must have acquired title to the subject-matter of his purchase, and have given a valuable consideration therefor in good faith and before receiving actual or constructive notice of any adverse claim or interest.² These elements must concur or the defense will be unavailing.³

2. Good Faith — In General. — For the purposes of this discussion the question of a purchaser's good faith is mainly a matter incident to the larger question of notice, the underlying principle of which is that where a purchaser before the completion of the purchase has actual or constructive notice of rights of other persons adverse to the title he is about to acquire, his conduct in completing the transaction is so unconscientious or even fraudulent that it will not be tolerated in a court of equity, and that consequently as against the rights of such persons he will not be permitted to retain the legal rights acquired under his purchase.⁴

Mere Relationship Between Vendor and Purchaser, without more, is not sufficient to impeach the bona fides of the latter, or to give rise to any inference of knowledge of adverse rights.⁵

3. Acquisition of Legal Title — a. GENERAL RULE. — It is well settled as a general proposition that in order for a person to occupy in equity the favored position of a purchaser for value and without notice, it is essential that he should have actually acquired the legal title to the property in controversy, and that the only instance in which a court of equity will afford protection to a purchaser on the ground that he has bought for value and without notice is where he has taken a conveyance of the legal estate and claims immunity from a purely equitable right or title prior in point of time.⁶ This principle, how-

Conveyance of Part of Land to Bona Fide Purchaser. — Where only a part of the land in controversy has been sold to a bona fide purchaser, the part remaining in the hands of the grantor with notice may properly be charged with the whole amount of the complainant's lien. Holcomb v. Mosher, 50 Mich. 252.

Death of Grantee with Notice and Sale by Heirs. — Where a grantee was charged with notice, the grantees of his heirs will not be chargeable with the notice that affected him unless it was also brought home to them. Phillips v. Sherman, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 39 S. W. Rep. 187.

Purchaser Must Have Legal Title. — Generally the purchaser from a grantor who had notice will not be protected unless he has acquired the legal title. Thus where he has taken no deed but claims under a bond for title, he will not be afforded protection unless his equity is in some way superior to that of the prior claimant. Pillow v. Shannon, 3 Yerg. (Tenn.) 508. See also infra, this title, Essential Ele- ments of Bona Fide Purchase — Acquisition of Legal Title.

ever, is subject to several qualifications, discussions of which will appear in their proper places.¹

b. APPLICATIONS OF RULE — (1) Conflicting Rights or Titles Both Equitable — (a) General Rule. — Since it is necessary for the purchaser to have acquired the legal title to the property forming the subject-matter of his purchase, it follows that as between equitable incumbrancers or purchasers of merely equitable titles, if the equities of the parties are otherwise equal, the prior in point of time prevails.²

cited throughout the following subdivision, Application of Rule.

The defense is not available in a case where either one or the other of the contesting parties has both the legal and equitable title, and the dispute is as to which has it. Generally the defense can prevail only in a contest between the holder of the legal title and the holder of a prior equity. Wells v. Walker, 29 Ga. 450.

A Person Who Has Taken a Contract in Writing for the purchase of lands, but who has paid nothing thereon, and has taken no deed, is not a bona fide purchaser for value. Schetter v. Southern Oregon Imp. Co., 19 Oregon 192.

Registration of Equitable Titles. — In states where equitable titles are subjects of registration, the rules governing priority of equities are materially altered, and a purchaser of a merely equitable interest for value and without notice, may under the statutes be protected as against prior equities, in the same manner as if he had acquired the legal estate. Batts v. Scott, 37 Tex. 59.

Thus in Pennsylvania the rule of the text was announced in the leading case of Chew v. Barnet, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 389, which was followed in several other cases; Sergeant v. Ingersoll, 7 Pa. St. 345; Reed v. Dickey, 2 Watts (Pa.) 459. See also Kramer v. Arthurs, 7 Pa. St. 165.

(b) Purchase of Legal Estate by Prior Party. — In a conflict between equitable incumbrancers, the prior party may clothe himself with the legal title and thus prevail against the subsequent party; the defense of bona fide purchase being generally unavailing against the legal estate.¹ And since, as a general rule, the prior equity will prevail without more, it seems clear that the holder of the prior equity may purchase the legal title and gain its additional protection, even after notice of the subsequent equity.²

(c) Purchase of Legal Estate by Subsequent Party. — In a case where the conflicting equities are equal so that priority in time would otherwise be controlling, the holder of the later equity may protect himself by subsequently acquiring the legal estate;³ the theory being that where the equities are equal the legal title will prevail.⁴ But whether he may protect himself by acquiring the legal title after notice, has given rise to a conflict in the authorities. This question is discussed in another part of this title.⁵

(2) Prior Legal Estate — (a) In General. — In England the question whether the plea of purchase for value and without notice was available in equity against the legal title, formerly gave rise to considerable diversity in the decisions. In some of the cases where the plaintiff was seeking purely equitable relief in aid of his legal title — that is, where he was invoking the auxiliary jurisdiction of the court — the plea was allowed; no distinction being recognized between the purchase of a legal and of an equitable title.⁶ In other similar cases, however, the plea was not allowed; it being held that the plea was available only as against an equitable title.⁷ Where the cause was one over which a court of equity had exclusive jurisdiction, not only to give relief to the plaintiff, but to enforce the equitable claim of the defendant, the court did not hesitate to deprive the defendant of the advantage which in the exercise of its auxiliary jurisdiction it permitted him to retain, and the plea was not available.⁸ Where the plaintiff pursuing the legal title invoked

But in subsequent decisions the rule was held inapplicable upon the ground that the recording acts in that state applied as well to equitable as to legal titles. Bellas v. McCarty, 10 Watts (Pa.) 13; Rhines v. Baird, 41 Pa. St. 256. Where the equitable title, however, is not entitled to record, the rule of the text prevails. Texas Consol. Compress, etc., Assoc. v. Dublin Compress, etc., Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 38 S. W. Rep. 409.

the aid of the court in a case where its jurisdiction was concurrent with that of a court of law — no distinctively equitable relief being asked — the plea did not prevail.¹

Under the Modern Practice in England, since the Judicature Act of 1873, the court now having complete jurisdiction over matters over which it had formerly had concurrent jurisdiction with the courts of common law, and being bound in a proper case to administer both legal and equitable relief, it seems that the plea is not available against either discovery or relief sought by the holder of the legal title.²

Rule in United States. — In the United States the rule appears to be settled that in the absence of statute the defense of purchase for value and without notice is not available against the legal title;³ but that where the legal title is outstanding in a prior grantee, the maxim caveat emptor applies in full force.⁴ And under these circumstances it has been held that the only ground upon which the subsequent purchaser can obtain any advantage or priority, in the absence of statute, is the theory that the prior party has done or omitted to do something which makes it inequitable for him to interpose his otherwise superior title.⁵

(b) Title Not in Vendor — aa. IN GENERAL. — Where no title, legal or equitable, passed by the conveyance to the purchaser, for the reason that the title was in another person than the vendor, the fact that the purchaser paid value and had no notice is immaterial, and, of course, he can have no protection as against the real owner or his successors in title unless by force of statute or on the principle of estoppel.⁶ For the same reason the grantees and mortgagees

bb. DEED TO VENDOR NOT DELIVERED. — Since the delivery of a deed is essential to its effect as a conveyance, and since intention is an essential element of delivery, a deed which comes into the grantee's possession without the grantor's knowledge, consent, or acquiescence is wholly ineffectual to pass title; and therefore a purchaser from the grantee obtains by his purchase no interest which a court of equity can be called upon to protect as against the title remaining in the original grantor, even though the purchaser pays value and has no notice of the want of delivery.²

cc. DEED TO VENDOR DELIVERED IN ESCROW. — The same rule applies where the deed was delivered in escrow, but was obtained by the grantee without performance of the condition.³ And where the legal title that remained in the grantor has passed to his heirs or devisees, the rule is not altered and the purchaser is not protected; the theory being that where the equities are equal the legal title will prevail.⁴

dd. DEED EXECUTED IN BLANK — NAME WRONGFULLY INSERTED. — Where a deed executed and acknowledged by the grantor, with a blank for the grantee's name, is surreptitiously and fraudulently taken from the grantor, and the blank filled up, no title passes thereby, and a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration from the person whose name is thus inserted stands in no better situation than his vendor, especially if the original grantor remain in possession of the property.⁵ Likewise, where a third person inserts in a deed the name of an additional grantee without the consent of the real grantee, the act is a mere spoliation, which, in the absence of fraud or negligence on the part of the real grantee, does not affect his rights even as against a bona fide purchaser from the person whose name was so inserted.⁶

ee. DEED TO VENDOR A FORGERY. — For obvious reasons a bona fide purchaser for value and without notice from a grantee in a forged conveyance obtains no title that a court of equity can protect.¹

(c) Want of Capacity in Vendor — aa. IN GENERAL. — Though the legal title was in the original grantor, if he had not the capacity to contract or convey, the deed of course passes no title, and a subsequent purchaser, though taking the property for value and without notice of the want of capacity, acquires nothing which a court of equity can protect as against the legal title remaining in the grantor and his successors in title.²

bb. COVERTURE. — Thus where the original grantor was a married woman and could not convey except by deed in which her husband joined, a conveyance by her alone is inoperative to pass title, and the purchaser and his grantees, although paying value and having no notice of the coverture, take nothing; but the title remains in the original grantor and her heirs.³

cc. INSANITY. — Where the grantor was insane, the authorities dealing with the rights of a purchaser without notice of the insanity are not harmonious.

Whether Deed Void or Voidable. — The question whether the deed of an insane grantor is void or merely voidable is fully discussed elsewhere in this work.⁴

Deed Void. — Where the deed of the grantor is void by reason of his insanity and want of capacity to convey, no title passes by the conveyance, and even a bona fide purchaser without notice of the insanity can acquire no right or title to the property.⁵ As against him, therefore, the sale may of course be set aside,⁶ and in such a case reimbursing the purchaser for the consideration paid or for the value of improvements he has made on the land is not a condition precedent to relief.⁷

Deed Voidable. — But where the deed of an insane grantor is merely voidable, it has been held in some cases that a bona fide purchaser without notice of the insanity may acquire title, and as against him the deed cannot be set aside.⁸ In other cases it has been held that the deed can be set aside, but only upon condition of placing the bona fide purchaser in statu quo,⁹ as by returning or tendering to him the consideration he has paid,¹⁰ and reimbursing him for sums paid for taxes and expended for permanent improvements.¹¹ On the other hand, it has been held that the conveyance could be set aside without placing or offering to place the purchaser in statu quo as a condition precedent to the relief asked;¹ except that where the grantor upon being restored to sanity still retains and uses the consideration, or seeks to enforce the securities he holds for the purchase money, or to avail himself of the contract constituting the consideration, then he must restore or release the same in order to be entitled to relief against the conveyance; the reason being that in such a case his conduct furnishes evidence of ratification.²

Intermediate Conveyance. — And where the grantee of the insane person has in turn conveyed to a purchaser for value and without notice of the insanity, it has been held that whether the original conveyance was void or voidable it will be set aside as against the bona fide purchaser, and this without the necessity of requiring restitution to him as a condition of relief. In such a case the right of the innocent purchaser to recover his purchase money rests between him and his immediate grantor, especially where the right can be enforced in the same suit.³

dd. INFANCY. — The rules respecting bona fide purchasers of property conveyed by infants are stated elsewhere in this work.⁴

c. QUALIFICATIONS OF RULE — (I) Better Equity in Subsequent Party. — The rule that where the equities are equal the elder prevails being founded upon equality of equities in the rival claimants, in all other respects save that of time, falls with the reason upon which it is based; and therefore, if the subsequent party has for any reason the better equity, and has acquired it without notice of the prior claim, his rights will be protected as against the holder of the elder equity.⁵ And in ascertaining which of the conflicting claims carries with it the better equity, no technical rule should be deemed controlling, but all the circumstances of the case should be carefully con-

Illustrations. — Thus where both claimants stand upon equitable rights merely, yet where the prior party claims under a secret equitable lien while the subsequent party claims under a contract for the conveyance of the legal title, and has paid part of the purchase price without notice, the latter party will be protected in his purchase to the extent of his payments, and the land will be held chargeable in his hands only to the extent of the unpaid balance. Cox v. Romine, 9 Gratt. (Va.) 27, disapproving Beirne v. Campbell, 4 Gratt. (Va.) 125.

Where the holder of the prior equity was a volunteer and the holder of the subsequent equity was a purchaser for value, the court refused to grant relief against the latter even upon the condition of reimbursing him the sum paid as purchase money. Mildmay v. Mildmay, cited in Bullock v. Sadlier, Ambl. 767.

It has been said that the principle upon which a court of equity protects a bona fide purchaser is wholly irrespective of what estate he has acquired by his purchase, but that it depends upon the consideration whether he stands equitably in at least as favorable position as his opponent; and that if he does the court will give no relief against him. Colyer v. Finch, 5 H. L. Cas. 920, per Lord Ch. Cranworth. See also Mitchell v. Gorrie, 6 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 625; Davison v. Wells, 15 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 89.

sidered,¹ especially the conduct of the parties.² It is only when nothing else appears in the case to give one party a better equity than the other that resort is to be had to priority of time.³

Prior Equity Not a Property Right. — But although as a general rule the defense of purchase for value and without notice can apply only in favor of one holding the legal estate and against the holder of a prior equitable title, yet it has been said that where the equity of the prior party does not amount to a property right — a title or estate — but is a mere right “to set aside a deed for fraud or to correct it for mistake,” it is not essential that the subsequent party should have the legal estate.⁴

(2) Possession of Premises and Improvements Made Thereon. — Where the conflicting equities are balanced, but the subsequent claimant is in possession of the property and has made valuable improvements thereon, a court of equity will not turn him out of possession in favor of the prior claimant; in such a case the maxim that where the equities are equal, melior est conditio possidentis (the condition of the possessor is the better), is applicable.⁵ But the foregoing principle must be taken with this qualification, that the advantage in respect to possession must be based upon a legal right thereto. Possession alone is not a sufficient ground for equity to refrain from giving relief against the purchaser.⁶

(3) Right to Use Legal Estate in Support of Security. — If the subsequent equitable incumbrancer has the right to use the legal estate in support of his security, he will be given preference over a prior equitable incumbrancer without such right.⁷

(4) Best Right to Call for Conveyance of Legal Estate — (a) Principle Stated. — If the subsequent party having purchased his equitable interest for value and without notice has the best right to call for the legal title, he will be protected against the prior equity to the same extent as if he had actually obtained a conveyance of the legal estate; as against him equity will afford no assistance to the holder of the elder equity.⁸

(b) Subsequent Acquisition of Legal Estate. — And, a fortiori, where the subsequent party has purchased an equitable interest for value and without notice, and has thus acquired the best right to call for the legal estate, he may thereafter clothe himself with the legal title, and thus, as against the prior equity,

Prior Legal Lien — Subsequent Equitable Title with Best Right to Legal Estate. — It has been held, however, that the protection which equity affords to a subsequent purchaser of an equitable title with the best right to call for the legal estate will not be given as against a prior lien which is in its nature legal rather than equitable; that even a purchaser for value and without notice will be protected only against a merely equitable title. Mutual Assur. Soc. v. Stone, 3 Leigh (Va.) 218 (statutory lien given to an insurance company upon property insured, for quotas, additional premiums and contributions).

be entitled to full protection as a bona fide purchaser; and this notwithstanding the fact that he has notice at the time he acquired the legal title.¹

(5) Legal Advantage in Subsequent Party. — Likewise a court of equity will afford no assistance against the subsequent purchaser or incumbrancer if in addition to his equitable rights he has acquired a legal advantage over the prior purchaser or incumbrancer.² Equity will not take from him any defense or protection which would avail him at law.³

(6) Acquisition of Legal Title by Subsequent Party. — It has been stated above that in a case where the equities are balanced so that priority of time would otherwise be controlling, the holder of the junior equity may gain the right to protection by acquiring the legal title.⁴

4. Consideration or Value — a. IN GENERAL. — It is an elementary proposition that the purchaser must have given a consideration or have parted with value in order to be entitled to protection in his purchase; otherwise no wrong is done him by depriving him of the property in favor of one meritoriously entitled thereto. A mere volunteer is not entitled to protection as a bona fide purchaser.⁵

b. NATURE AND ADEQUACY OF CONSIDERATION — (1) Sufficiency in General. — It has been said that the consideration necessary to constitute one who pays it a purchaser for value and without notice "has no relation to the general law of contracts and binding promises;"⁶ and in conformity to this theory it is held that the sufficiency of the consideration is governed not by the technical rules of the common law, but by the principles of equity jurisprudence.⁷

Value Must Be Given. — In the sense in which the word "consideration" is used in courts of equity, it means substantial value, and nothing less will suffice to constitute a grantee of land a purchaser for a valuable consideration.⁸

Payment of Purchase Price in Confederate Money.

— See the title PAYMENT, vol. 22, p. 546.

Merely Nominal Consideration. — The payment of a sum so far below the value of the property as to be a merely nominal consideration is not such a payment of value as will entitle the purchaser to protection in equity.¹

Consideration Need Not Be Full Value of Property. — The consideration, however, while it must be valuable, need not be commensurate with the value of the property.² And the payment of a sum much below the actual value of the land will be held sufficient.³

But Gross Inadequacy of Price may furnish a sufficient ground for charging the purchaser with constructive notice of defects in the title.⁴

(2) Love and Affection. — Love and affection as a consideration for a conveyance⁵ or a devise⁶ by a parent to his child is insufficient to constitute the latter a purchaser for value.

(3) Marriage. — It has been held that the consideration of marriage will support a plea of purchase for value and without notice, as well as a payment of money.⁷

(4) Promise to Support Grantor. — A promise by the grantee to support the grantor, or the grantor and his wife, for life is not a valuable consideration within the rule of equity that protects the purchaser; the reason being that the transaction in effect is but a trust for the benefit of the grantor.⁸

(5) Becoming Surety for Grantor. — It has been held that the mere assumption of a liability of the grantor upon a contingency, as becoming surety for him, is not such a consideration as will entitle the purchaser or mortgagee to protection; the reason being that he may never be called upon to pay anything by reason of the suretyship.⁹ But the weight of authority appears to be to the contrary, it being held that the incurring of a liability to part with value in futuro is a sufficient consideration to support the purchase; so where land is conveyed or mortgaged to secure the grantee against such liabilities as he may incur as surety for the grantor, the grantee is protected as a purchaser for value.¹⁰

(6) Release of Claims Against Third Person. — The release by the purchaser of claims against a third person may be a sufficient consideration.¹¹

The Release of Stale and Worthless Claims against the grantor does not constitute such a consideration as will support the defense of purchase for value. Perkins v. Wilkinson, 86 Wis. 538.

1. Nominal Consideration Insufficient. — Mason v. Mullahy, 145 Ill. 383; Kitteridge v. Chapman, 36 Iowa 348; Turner v. Howard, 10 N. Y. App. Div. 555; Ten Eyck v. Witbeck, 135 N. Crosby*, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 26 S. W. Rep. 138 (property worth $8,000 purchased for $5); Richerson v. Moody, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 67. See also Kearney v. Vaughan, 50 Mo. 284.

2. Payment of Less than Real Value Sufficient. — More v. Mayhow, Freem. Ch. 175; Bullock v. Sadlier, Ambl. 764; Miller v. Fraley, 23 Ark. 735; Dean v. Anderson, 34 N. J. 3. Bullock v. Sadlier, Ambl. 764.

It seems that if the consideration is such as would be deemed sufficient within the statutes of Elizabeth, the purchase will not be impeached in equity. Bassett v. Nosworthy,

4. See infra, this title, Notice, Its Sufficiency and Effect—Constructive Notice—By Inadequacy of Consideration.

5. Love and Affection Not Sufficient. — Salter v. Dunn, 1 Bush (Ky.) 311.

6. Jackson v. Lynch, 129 Ill. 72. See also Wamburzee v. Kennedy, 4 Desaus. (S. Car.) 478.

8. Promise to Support Grantor Not Sufficient. — Dow v. Jewell, 18 N. H. 340, 45 Am. Dec. 371. See also Sandlin v. Robbins, 62 Ala. 477; Woodall v. Kelly, 85 Ala. 368, 7 Am. St. Rep. 57; Smith v. Smith, 11 N. H. 459.

11. Release by Grantee of Claim Against Third Person. — Halbert v. DeBode, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 615.

Thus the surrender to the grantor of the promissory note of a third person is sufficient.¹

(7) Exchange of Property. — One who conveys real estate² or releases interests therein³ as a consideration for a conveyance of other lands to him is a purchaser for value.

Exchange of Land for Shares of Stock. — Where a corporation takes land in payment of a subscription for capital stock, the subscriber thereupon becoming the owner of the stock, the corporation is a purchaser for value; and this notwithstanding that no stock certificates are issued, for the certificates are merely evidence of ownership.⁴ But payment of the purchase price in worthless mining stock does not constitute the grantee of the land a purchaser for value.⁵

(8) Giving Security for Payment — (a) General Rule. — The consideration must be actually paid or performed. Giving security for payment of the purchase money or for an unpaid balance thereof is not equivalent to payment, for against the enforcement of the security a court of equity can grant relief.⁶

(b) Exception. — But where the circumstances are such that a court of equity cannot afford relief against the enforcement of the security, an exception to the rule is made, and the giving of the security will operate as payment.⁷

2. Conveyance of Other Land to Vendor. — Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Neal, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 427.

Husband and Wife Conveying Homestead as Consideration for Deed to Wife. — Thus a deed conveying the property in controversy, executed to a married woman by a third party, in consideration of her execution, jointly with her husband, to the third party, of a deed of the homestead of herself and husband and family, is a conveyance upon a valuable consideration received directly by the third party from the married woman. Rivers v. Rivers, 38 Fla. 65.

Exchange of Property under Decree by Consent. — Where a man, his wife and their minor children, the children being represented by next friend, were complainants in a bill which was disposed of by a consent decree, and that decree declared that certain premises, previously the property of the husband and father, should belong to the wife for her life and to the children in remainder, this was in effect a conveyance by the husband and father; and if the wife and children, in and by the same decree, parted with other premises which previously belonged to them, and these premises thereby became the property of the father and his children by a former marriage, the wife and her children were purchasers for value from the husband and father. Wallace v. Jones, 93 Ga. 419.

3. Relinquishment of Rights in Other Property. — Halbert v. DeBode, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 615.

Surrender of Undivided Interest by Cotenants — Partition. — Where one of several cotenants of land surrenders by conveyance to the other cotenants his undivided interest in exchange for a conveyance by them of a particular part of the same lands in severalty, he is a purchaser for value. Latham v. Inman, 88 Ga. 515; Citizens State Bank v. Julian, 153 Ind. 673. And it makes no difference in the result that the partition and assignment in severalty are effected by commissioners appointed under order of the court. Citizens State Bank v. Julian, 153 Ind. 673. See also the title PARTITION, vol. 21, p. 1126.

7. When Enforcement of Security Cannot Be Prevented. — Losey v. Simpson, 11 N. J. Eq.

(c) Giving Negotiable Promissory Note — aa. GENERAL RULE. — As a general rule the giving of the negotiable promissory notes of the purchaser is not a payment of value, at least in a case so circumstanced that a court of equity can prevent their enforcement.¹

bb. EFFECT OF TRANSFER OF NOTE. — But where the notes have been negotiated by the vendor of the land, and when due are in the hands of bona fide holders for value, so that the purchaser is absolutely bound to pay, then the situation of the purchaser is the same as if the purchase money had actually been paid.² And even in a case where the notes have not been negotiated and it is not shown that they have left the hands of the vendor, if it is impracticable for a court of equity to prevent their transfer to an innocent purchaser who could then enforce them against the maker, the latter's situation will be the same as if the notes had been thus negotiated, and the giving of the notes will operate as payment of the purchase money.³

(g) Antecedent Debt — (a) In General. — The question whether a pre-existing indebtedness of the grantor to the grantee is such a valuable consideration as will constitute the grantee a purchaser for value and so entitle him to protection in equity has been productive of much conflict of authority.

(b) Rule that Grantee Is Not Protected. — In a number of jurisdictions the courts have held that the discharge of an existing debt or liability owing from grantor to grantee is not equivalent to a payment of money or a parting with value so as to constitute a sufficient consideration; but that in order for the grantee to be a purchaser for value, entitled to protection in equity, he must advance some new consideration or surrender some additional right at the time of the purchase.⁴

246. In this case the purchaser gave a bond and mortgage to secure payment of the purchase money; but it was a part of the negotiations that the complainants should advance the purchase money to the vendor and take an assignment of the securities, which was done. It was held that the purchaser had paid value and should be protected in his purchase, and that the complainants should also be protected by the preservation of their lien under the bond and mortgage. See also Thomas v. Stone, Walk. (Mich.) 110.

1. Giving Negotiable Note Not Payment. — Baldwin v. Sager, 70 Ill. 508; Greenlee v. Marquis, 49 Mo. App. 290; Chancellor v. Bell, 45 N. J. Eq. 538 (note given for assignment of a mortgage).

Payment by Note Held Equivalent to Payment in Cash. — It has been held in Texas, however, that payment of the purchase price by giving negotiable promissory notes of the purchaser is as much a payment of value as giving cash. Cameron v. Romele, 53 Tex. 238; Watkins v. Sproull, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 427. See also Le Page v. Slade, 79 Tex. 478; Dodd v. Gaines, 82 Tex. 429. Contra, Tate v. Kramer, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 427.

Y.) 327.* And of course, where the purchaser has by legal process been compelled to pay the notes, he will be protected. Wetmore v. Woods, 62 Mo. App. 265.

Failure of Purchaser to Enjoin Negotiation. — But where in a proper case the purchaser can after notice enjoin the negotiation of the notes but fails to do so, and the notes are transferred to a bona fide holder for value, the purchaser must pay them, and will be afforded no relief for his loss, since it is the result of his own folly. Greenlee v. Marquis, 49 Mo. App. 290.

Crediting Agreed Price on Antecedent Debt. — In a jurisdiction where the rule of the text prevails, the crediting of the purchase price upon a pre-existing debt, without more, is not a sufficient consideration to constitute the grantee a purchaser for value. Bonner v. Grigsby, 84 Tex. 330, 31 Am. St. Rep. 48; Swenson v. Seale, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 28 S. W. Rep. 143; Marshall v. Marshall, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 42 S. W. Rep. 353.

(c) Exception to Rule — Release of Security. — The theory upon which the rule is based is that by taking a conveyance the creditor has actually lost nothing, since if the title is defective or if the land is taken by a prior claimant, he still has his remedy against his grantor. But where this result could not be reached the rule fails, and if the creditor in consideration of the conveyance has released his security for the antecedent debt so that it cannot be revived, and he cannot be placed in statu quo, or has put himself in such a position that he cannot in any contingency enforce the debt, then it is held that he has parted with a valuable consideration and is entitled to protection as a purchaser for value.¹

(d) Rule that Grantee Is Protected. — There are a number of jurisdictions in which it is held that the absolute satisfaction and discharge of an antecedent debt owing by the grantor to the grantee is as effective as a contemporaneous payment of money to constitute the grantee a purchaser for value and entitle him to protection in equity.²

The Reason of This Rule is that the enforcement of the prior equity against the land will not revive the indebtedness for the payment and satisfaction of which the land was conveyed.³

Relation of Debtor and Creditor Essential. — But to bring the rule into operation the relation of debtor and creditor must be shown to exist between grantor and grantee;⁴ and a transaction that may be considered as a gift of money rather than a loan will not be sufficient to establish that relation.⁵

(e) Rules under the Recording Acts. — The same diversity of opinion as shown above exists in the law falling within the scope of the recording acts, some courts holding an antecedent debt a sufficient consideration under the statutes, and others holding the contrary. A full discussion of these authorities will be found under their appropriate title elsewhere in this work.⁶

(f) Conveyance or Mortgage as Security for Antecedent Debt. — By the prevailing weight of authority a conveyance or mortgage taken from the debtor merely to secure the creditor for an existing debt, no extension of the time of payment being given and no present consideration of any kind being advanced, does not constitute the creditor so secured a purchaser for value.⁷ The contrary, however, has been held in some cases.¹

(g) General Assignment for Benefit of Creditors. — As a general rule, neither an assignee for the benefit of creditors nor the creditors secured by the assignment occupy the position of purchasers for value, the reason being that no consideration is advanced; hence they stand as mere volunteers and take subject to all equities that could have been enforced against the land while owned by the assignor, and this regardless of notice.² But there is some authority to the contrary.¹

(h) Extending Time of Payment of Antecedent Debt. — It is well settled that an extension of the time of payment of an antecedent debt is a sufficient consideration for a mortgage to secure the debt. So where a debtor executes to his creditor a mortgage to secure a pre-existing debt, if as a part of the consideration there is such a valid, binding, contemporaneous agreement to extend payment of the debt to a future time as will disable the mortgagee to sue before that time, this constitutes such a new, present consideration as will make the mortgagee a purchaser for value within the rule of equity entitling purchasers for value and without notice to protection against prior equitable rights.² It has been considered, however, that the extension of time must constitute a part of the contract by which the mortgage or deed of trust is given, and it is accordingly held that even though the practical result of the transaction may be to extend the time of payment, the person whose debt is thus secured will not be protected unless the extension was contemplated by the parties at the time the security was given, and was intended by them to constitute a part of the consideration for the conveyance.³

(i) Antecedent Debt as Part Consideration — Absolute Conveyance. — In a jurisdiction where the discharge of a pre-existing debt does not constitute such a valuable consideration for a conveyance of land as will entitle the grantee to protection as a purchaser for value, it is nevertheless held that where a part of the consideration is the discharge of an antecedent debt, and the rest of it a contemporaneous payment of value or its equivalent, if the latter constitutes a substantial part of the whole consideration the grantee will be accorded the position of a purchaser for value to the same extent as if the entire consideration had been a contemporaneous payment of money.⁴ And even where the greater portion of the consideration was a pre-existing debt and the rest was a contemporaneous payment of value, it has been held that the purchaser was entitled to full protection.⁵ But on the other hand it is held that where the greater part of the consideration is a pre-existing debt, the purchaser will be protected only to the extent of the part advanced at the time of the purchase.⁶

6. Golson v. Fielder, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 400. In Freeman v. Tinsley, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 40 S. W. Rep. 835, where an independent executor made an unauthorized sale of land of the decedent's estate, and the vendee conveyed to his wife in consideration of an antecedent debt and the assumption of a community debt,

Mortgage. — Although, as it has been shown, a mortgagee whose mortgage is given simply to secure a pre-existing debt is not a purchaser for value,¹ yet where there is some additional consideration advanced at the time the mortgage is given, the rule is subject to qualifications. Thus, where besides the antecedent debt there is a release of other security, an extension of the time of payment, a giving of further credit, or a reduction of the rate of interest, or a combination of these matters of new and additional consideration, the mortgagee will be accorded the position of a purchaser for value.² But where the greater part of the consideration for a mortgage is an antecedent debt, and the residue is money or some other property of fixed or easily ascertainable value, given at the time, the mortgagee will be deemed a purchaser for value only to the extent of the new consideration.³

(10) Partial Failure of Consideration. — Where a part of the consideration has failed, the purchaser or mortgagee will be protected only as to the part subsisting.⁴

5. Absence of Notice. — An essential element of a bona fide purchase is, of course, absence of notice of any adverse interest. But since it is necessary to ascertain what constitutes notice before its presence or absence can be predicated in a given case, a discussion of its absence must necessarily, if illogically, consist in affirmative statements of the circumstances giving rise to its presence and of the consequences flowing therefrom.⁵

V. NOTICE — ITS SUFFICIENCY AND EFFECT — 1. In General. — The general principles of the law of notice have been stated elsewhere in this work.⁶ It remains, therefore, only to apply these principles to the specific matters under discussion, together with such additional rules as may be peculiar to the nature of this subject.

2. Nature and Sufficiency of Notice — a. CONSTRUCTIVE NOTICE — (1) General Rule. — The doctrine of constructive notice, or notice implied from it was held that the wife was not a bona fide purchaser for value.

1. See supra, this section, Conveyance or Mortgage as Security for Antecedent Debt.

2. Additional, Contemporaneous Consideration. — The fact that a mortgage is taken as security for a pre-existing debt does not prevent the mortgagee from being a purchaser for value where, at the time of taking it, he released other security and extended the time of payment. Alston v. Marshall, 112 Ala. 638; Simmons Hardware Co. v. Kaufman, 77 Tex. 136.

Where the consideration of a mortgage is a pre-existing debt and also another debt contemporaneously contracted, and an extension of the time of payment of the antecedent debt, the mortgagee occupies the position of a purchaser for value. Whitfield v. Riddle, 78 Ala. 100.

Where a mortgage was executed to secure a contemporaneous as well as a pre-existing debt, the greater and substantial part being contemporaneous, and this mortgage was afterward renewed by another and the time of payment extended; it was held, that the mortgagee was a purchaser for value to the extent of the entire amount secured. Branch v. Griffin, 99 N. Car. 173.

The surrender and cancellation of old notes, the extension of the time of payment of the debt, and the reduction of the rate of interest, are a sufficient consideration for new notes, to secure which the mortgage is given, to entitle the mortgagee to protection as a purchaser for value. Farmers', etc., Nat. Bank v. Wallace, 45 Ohio St. 166.

Where a creditor, as a consideration for a mortgage from his debtor, extended the time of payment of his debt, and purchased a certain mortgage executed by the debtor, it was held that there was a sufficient consideration to support the mortgage to him, and to entitle both mortgages in his hands to priority over another and prior mortgage given by the debtor for the purchase money of the property, but which by mistake did not contain a correct description of the land, and of which the creditor had no notice. Port v. Embree, 54 Iowa 14.

Extending Further Credit. — Ingenhuett v. Hunt, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 252.

3. Protection Pro Tanto. — Wells v. Morrow, 38 Ala. 126; Merritt v. Northern R. Co., 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 605. See also Gerson v. Pool, 31 Ark. 88.

4. Partial Failure of Consideration. — Klaes v. Klaes, 103 Iowa 689. In this case a client contracted to pay his attorney one-half the alimony which might be recovered in a divorce suit brought by the client. A divorce having been secured, and certain land, title to which was in the wife, having been awarded as alimony, the client gave the attorney a mortgage to secure the contract and the repayment of certain advances. The decree for alimony was thereafter set aside for fraud. It was held that the attorney was not a bona fide mortgagee for value beyond the amount of his advances, the rest of the consideration having failed.

circumstances,¹ finds perhaps its most frequent application in connection with purchases of real property; and it is a well-settled rule that where a purchaser has knowledge or information of facts which are sufficient to put an ordinarily prudent man upon inquiry, and the inquiry, if followed with reasonable diligence, would lead to the discovery of defects in the title or of equitable rights of others affecting the property in question, the purchaser will be held chargeable with knowledge thereof and will not be heard to say that he did not actually know of them. In other words, knowledge of facts sufficient to excite inquiry is constructive notice of all that the inquiry would have disclosed.²

(2) Qualifications of Rule. — No general statement can be formulated which will govern in all cases the sufficiency of the facts or circumstances that impose upon a purchaser of land the duty of inquiring as to the soundness of his title; but each case must to a great extent be determined according to its peculiar facts.¹ Yet certain limitations and qualifications to the doctrine of constructive notice are well recognized.² Thus, it is generally conceded that in determining whether the purchaser is chargeable with constructive notice, the question is not simply whether he could have discovered the existence of the adverse equity, but whether under the circumstances of the case it was incumbent upon him as an ordinarily prudent man to make inquiry.³ And

English Statute — Conveyancing Act, 1882. — In England the rule of the text has in a negative form been embodied in a statute, the Conveyancing Act, 1882, § 3, subsec. 1, which provides that "a purchaser shall not be prejudicially affected by notice of any instrument, fact, or thing unless it is within his own knowledge, or would have come to his knowledge if such inquiries and inspections had been made as ought reasonably to have been made by him." Bailey v. Barnes, (1894) 1 Ch. 35; Oliver v. Hinton, (1899) 2 Ch. 269.

Knowledge that Vendor Has Not Paid Purchase Money. — Where the purchaser has knowledge or information that his vendor has not fully paid the purchase money for the land to the prior vendor, he is chargeable with constructive notice of the amount unpaid, and of the existence of a vendor's lien upon the land to secure the payment. Frail v. Ellis, 16 Beav. 350; Cordova v. Hood, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 1; Brisco v. Minah Consol. Min. Co., 82 Fed. Rep. 952; Foster v. Stallworth, 62 Ala. 547; Edmonds v. Torrence, 48 Ala. 38; Woodall v. Kelly, 85 Ala. 368, 7 Am. St. Rep. 57; Thompson v. Sheppard, 85 Ala. 612; Major v. Bukley, 51 Mo. 227; Graham v. West, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 26 S. W. Rep. 920; Manly v. Slason, 21 Vt. 271, 52 Am. Dec. 60.

He is not entitled to rely upon the statements of his vendor. Foster v. Stallworth, 62 Ala. 547.

He is also put upon inquiry as to whether the lien has been waived by taking other security. Woddall v. Kelly, 85 Ala. 368, 7 Am. St. Rep. 57; and is chargeable with constructive notice of a purchase-money mortgage given by his vendor, Foster v. Stallworth, 62 Ala. 547.

But the fact that a conveyance of land, after the return unsatisfied of a fieri facias against the grantor, bears a recent date, is not evidence that the consideration money is not paid, and so does not afford constructive notice to the subsequent purchaser. Wood v. State Bank, 5 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 196. See generally the title VENDOR'S LIEN.

Purchase from Plaintiff in Ejectment Suit. — Where the vendor is the plaintiff in an ejectment suit for the land in question, and holds the property under a writ of possession, the purchaser who has knowledge of these facts has a sufficient notice of a claim adverse to his vendor to charge him with constructive notice of the nature and extent of that claim. Ridgeway v. Holliday, 59 Mo. 444.

1. Sufficiency of Circumstances Dependent upon Facts of Particular Case. — Jaques v. Weeks, 7 Watts (Pa.) 271; Wethered v. Boon, 17 Tex. 143; Hines v. Perry, 25 Tex. 443; Martel v. Somers, 26 Tex. 559. And see the title NOTICE, vol. 21, p. 585.

2. A number of these restrictive principles are discussed in the title NOTICE, vol. 21, p. 585 et seq.

3. Duty to Make Inquiry Is Essential. — Wilson v. Miller, 16 Iowa 111; Anderson v. Blood, 152 N. Y. 285, 57 Am. St. Rep. 515, affirming 86 Hun (N. Y.) 244, which reversed Anderson v.

in order to impose this duty upon the purchaser the circumstances relied upon must have been such as clearly to have suggested a path of inquiry that would have led to knowledge of the ultimate fact with notice of which it is sought to charge him.¹ There must be such a connection between the facts discovered and the further facts to be discovered that the former may be said to furnish a reasonable and natural clue to the latter;² for equity will not impute to a purchaser notice of matters which lie beyond the range of the inquiry suggested, and which the purchaser, in the exercise of due diligence, would not have discovered.³ Thus, circumstances that are merely equivocal will not charge the purchaser with the duty of making inquiry.⁴ And vague statements and indefinite rumors,⁵ especially where they proceed from persons having no interest in the property,⁶ are likewise insufficient. The general rule has been further limited in a number of decisions by the doctrine announced in a leading English case,⁷ to the effect that if the purchaser had not actual knowledge that the property was in some way affected, so as clearly to be put upon inquiry as to the nature and extent of the defect in title, then it must appear that for the very purpose of avoiding knowledge he knowingly

As to a Mere Creditor of the Grantor, the purchaser is under no duty to make a critical examination of the title. Reynolds v. Haskins, 68 Vt. 426.

Deed in Escrow. — The fact that a purchaser had knowledge that a prior deed had been executed and deposited in escrow, but that for failure to comply with its conditions it had been returned to the grantor, is not sufficient to put him on inquiry as to what became of the deed. Kenney v. Jaynes, 26 Colo. 154.

The Fact that the Vendor Was in Indigent Circumstances when the property was conveyed to him is not of itself sufficient to charge the purchaser with constructive notice of a secret trust upon which the deed to the vendor was made. Cameron v. Romele, 53 Tex. 238.

1. Path of Inquiry Must Lead to Knowledge. — Wilson v. Miller, 16 Iowa 111; Willis v. Vallette, 4 Met. (Ky.) 186; Jaques v. Weeks, 7 Watts (Pa.) 261; Wilkins v. Anderson, 11 Pa. St. 399.

2. Connection between Facts Known and Other Facts. — Trinidad v. Milwaukee, etc., Smelting, etc., Co., (C. C. A.) 63 Fed. Rep. 887; Wallace v. Jones, 93 Ga. 420; Pittman v. Sofley, 64 Ill. 155; Slattery v. Rafferty, 93 Ill. 277; Birdsall v. Russell, 29 N. Y. 220; Gearon v. Kearney, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 22 Misc. (N. Y.) 285; Raymond v. Flavel, 27 Oregon 245; Black v. Childs, 14 S. Car. 321.

3. Raymond v. Flavel, 27 Oregon 245; Black v. Childs, 14 S. Car. 321.

The facts of which the purchaser is informed must be such as will lead to knowledge of the fact in question. Wilson v. Miller, 16 Iowa 111; Gearon v. Kearney, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 22 Misc. (N. Y.) 285; Cornell v. Maltby, 165 N. Y. 557; Lewis v. Madison, 1 Munf. (Va.) 317; National Valley Bank v. Harman, 75 Va. 608. And the fact to knowledge of which they will lead must relate to the specific property in controversy. Lewis v. Madison, 1 Munf. (Va.) 317.

Notice of an incumbrance puts the purchaser upon inquiry as to the particulars of the indebtedness, but knowledge of the existence of a debt by bond does not put him upon inquiry to ascertain whether it is secured by lien upon the land. Johnson v. Valido Marble Co., 64 Vt. 348.

Notice of a specific incumbrance upon the land is not constructive notice of other claims or equities between the incumbrancer and the grantor, and the purchaser does not take subject thereto. Davison v. Waite, 2 Munf. (Va.) 527.

The purchaser must have some more authentic means of information than can be found in an application to one who is interested in concealing the truth. Bugbee's Appeal, 110 Pa. St. 331; National Valley Bank v. Harman, 75 Va. 608.

4. Circumstances Merely Equivocal. — Arnold v. Barnett, 90 Ga. 334; Slattery v. Rafferty, 93 Ill. 277; Sheldon v. Holmes, 58 Mich. 138.

5. Vague Statements and Indefinite Rumors Not Sufficient. — Barnhart v. Greenshields, 9 Moo. P. C. 18; Flagg v. Mann, 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 491; Parkhurst v. Hosford, 21 Fed. Rep. 827; Pittman v. Sofley, 64 Ill. 155; Slattery v. Rafferty, 93 Ill. 277; Foust v. Moorman, 2 Ind. 17; Wilson v. Miller, 16 Iowa 111; Loughridge v. Bowland, 52 Mis. 546; Woodworth v. Paige, 5 Ohio St. 76; Raymond v. Flavel, 27 Oregon 245; Jaques v. Weeks, 7 Watts (Pa.) 267; Rutherford v. Jenkins, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1899) 54 S. W. Rep. 1007; Wethered v. Boon, 17 Tex. 143; Bacon v. O'Connor, 25 Tex. 225; Connell v. Connell, 32 W. Va. 319; Parker v. Kane, 4 Wis. 11, 65 Am. Dec. 283; Lamont v. Stimson, 5 Wis. 443. Compare Fitzsimmons v. Ogden, 7 Cranch (U. S.) 2.

6. Flagg v. Mann, 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 491; Pittman v. Sofley, 64 Ill. 155; Slattery v. Rafferty, 93 Ill. 277; Woodworth v. Paige, 5 Ohio St. 76; Lamont v. Stimson, 5 Wis. 443.

So a statement by a stranger to the title that the title was void, without more, has been held insufficient to charge the purchaser with notice of matters not stated by the stranger. Ratteree v. Conley, 74 Ga. 153.

7. Rule as to Fraudulent Abstaining from Inquiry. — Jones v. Smith, 1 Hare 55, affirmed 1 Phil. 244.

and designedly abstained from making inquiry; in other words, that if mere want of caution as distinguished from wilful and fraudulent blindness is all that can be imputed to the purchaser, he cannot be held chargeable with notice.¹ In other cases, however, it is held that it is not necessary to show fraud on the part of the purchaser, but that gross negligence is sufficient; that is, that the basis of imputing notice to the purchaser is not merely that he might have acquired the knowledge in question, or, on the other hand, that he was guilty of fraud in not acquiring it, but that he ought to have acquired it and would have done so but for his gross negligence attending the transaction.² But the gross negligence that will be a ground of constructive notice has been said to be simply such negligence as would render it unjust to deprive the prior incumbrancer of his rights in favor of the purchaser.³

(3) By Possession of Property — (a) In General. — A branch of the doctrine of constructive notice is the notice afforded by possession, and the general rule is well settled that the actual, open, and notorious possession and user of land by a person other than the vendor is of itself sufficient to put a purchaser or mortgagee upon inquiry and to affect him with constructive notice of whatever rights in the property the person in possession may have.⁴

The fact that the purchaser took security in addition to the covenants in the deed for warranty of title is not alone sufficient proof that he had notice of outstanding adverse equities. Lamont v. Stimson, 5 Wis. 443.

Mere negligent omission to make inquiry is not sufficient. Reynolds v. Carlisle, 99 Ga. 730.

that the purchaser was actually ignorant that the land was adversely held,¹ especially where he could easily have acquired knowledge of the fact, but neglected to visit the premises.² But it has been held in Missouri under the recording acts that the possession is not of itself sufficient to charge the purchaser with notice, but that there must be some evidence tending to show that he had knowledge of the possession.³

POSSESSION BY TENANT OR LESSEE* — (aa) In General. — Where the land is in possession of persons holding as tenants or lessees, their possession is constructive notice of the nature and extent of their interest; or, as it is sometimes stated, the possession of a tenant is constructive notice of the terms of his lease.⁴

Possession as Notice under the Recording Acts. — In probably the majority of jurisdictions the rule that possession of land by a person other than the grantor constitutes constructive notice to a purchaser applies under the recording acts; the possession of a person under an unrecorded deed being held equivalent to the notice that would be afforded by the record of that deed. See the title RECORDING ACTS.

In Maine this rule prevailed prior to the Revised Statutes of 1841, but those statutes have abrogated the rule and require actual notice of the unrecorded deed in order to affect a subsequent purchaser; but the rule applies, however, to deeds made prior to the statutes structive notice afforded by possession by a tenant extends not only to the terms of the tenancy, but also to the tenant's rights under any collateral agreement or contract respecting the land, such as a contract to purchase or the like.¹ But on the contrary it is held in Texas that the possession of land by a tenant will operate to charge a purchaser with notice only of such rights as the nature of the possession would ordinarily suggest or indicate, and not of rights or claims wholly unconnected with the character of the occupancy; and hence that it will not operate as notice of any claim or right by the tenant inconsistent with his tenancy, such as a claim of title to the land² or to fixtures annexed to the freehold.³ As a consequence of this rule, the mere occupancy of the land by a tenant does not impose upon the purchaser the duty of making any further inquiry than to ascertain the existence and terms of the tenancy.⁴ And if the tenant thus in possession claims title to the land, nothing short of a repudiation of the tenancy, brought home to the purchaser before the purchase, can affect him with notice of the claim.⁵

(bb) Notice of Landlord's Title — Rule in United States. — In the United States the possession of land by a tenant of a person other than the vendor is not only constructive notice of his own interests, but is also constructive notice of his landlord's title or claim of title to the land; the reason being that the possession of the tenant is the possession of the landlord.⁶

The fact that the tenant is generally known to be paying rent to a person other than the vendor is an additional circumstance to put the purchaser on inquiry. Smith v. Jackson, 76 Ill. 254. See also Roberts v. Moseley, 64 Mo. 507.

Where a tenant is in possession of part of a tract of land, his occupancy may be notice of the title of the landlord in the whole tract. Allison v. Pitkins, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 655; Mattfeld v. Huntington, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 716, affirmed (Tex. Civ. App. 1900) 55 S. W. Rep. 361.

The possession of the tenant is constructive

Rule in England. — In England the rule that the possession of a tenant is notice of his landlord's title is not recognized; the extent to which the possession of a tenant operates as constructive notice being limited to whatever interests the tenant may himself have in the land.¹ But where the purchaser has notice that the estate is in the possession of a certain person by his under-tenants, then, of course, he is put upon inquiry as to the rights of that person, whether the possession is actually held by him or his under-tenants.² And knowledge by the purchaser that the rents are paid by the tenants to some person whose receipt is inconsistent with the vendor's title is constructive notice of that person's rights in the property.³

bb. POSSESSION BY PRIOR GRANTOR AFTER CONVEYANCE. — The possession by a vendor after conveying the land is in some jurisdictions constructive notice to a subsequent purchaser from the grantee of any rights or equities that the vendor may have in the property; the reason being that it is a fact in conflict with the legal effect of his deed and is evidence that he still retains an interest in the premises.⁴ In other jurisdictions, on the contrary, the possession by a notice of the landlord's title as long as the tenancy continues, though the tenant holds over his term, and though after his death the tenancy is continued by his heirs or for the benefit of his children. Mattfeld v. Huntington, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 716, affirmed (Tex. Civ. App. 1900) 55 S. W. Rep. 361.

The rule of the text applies although the tenant originally entered as a trespasser, if he afterward attorned to the owner or his grantee. Mallett v. Kaehler, 141 Ill. 70.

So, where the tenant originally entered as a trespasser and afterward attorned to the true owner, and paid rent to him under a written lease, it was held that his possession was notice of his landlord's title, although at the time of the purchase the term of the lease had expired; the tenant not having repudiated the tenancy. League v. Snyder, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 13.

Possession by Lessee Not Notice that Lessor Has Assigned Lease. — Steel v. De May, 102 Mich. 274.

1. Possession of Tenant Not Notice of Landlord's Title. — Hunt v. Luck, (1901) 1 Ch. 45, following Barnhart v. Greenshields, 9 Moo. P. C. 18, and *Knight v. Payment of Rent. — Hence the mere fact of the tenant's possession does not make it the duty of the purchaser to inquire of the tenant to whom the latter pays his rent; and the fact that the rents are known to be paid to a real estate agent according to the usual practice is of no additional force in charging the purchaser with constructive notice of the landlord's title. *Hunt v. Fraudulent Conveyance. — In Hood v. Fahnestock, 1 Pa. St. 470, 44 Am. Dec. 147, the possession by the grantor was held constructive notice to a subsequent purchaser that the conveyance by the grantor to the grantee was fraudulent under the statutes of 13 Eliz., c. 5, and 27 Eliz., c. 4.

Occupant Without Knowledge of His Rights. — The rule of the text does not apply, however, where the grantor in possession does not know that he has any rights respecting the property he has conveyed; the obvious reason being that by making inquiry of him the subsequent vendor after he has parted with the legal title is held not sufficient to put a subsequent purchaser from the grantee on inquiry as to any rights or equities that the occupant may have in the land, inconsistent with his conveyance; but the grantor is considered as holding for a mere temporary purpose, without claim of right, and in subordination to his grantee.¹ The fact that the deed from the grantor appears of record furnishes an additional reason for this rule.²

Possession by Both Grantor and Grantee. — In a jurisdiction where the possession of a grantor after conveyance is not notice to a subsequent purchaser, it is held that where both vendor and vendee are in possession of the premises at the same time, since the possession of the former is apparently not inconsistent with that of the latter, a purchaser from the grantee may regard the legal possession as being with the occupant who holds the legal title, i. e., the grantee; and consequently that the occupancy of the grantor does not charge the purchaser with notice of any rights that the grantor may have in the property.³

cc. POSSESSION BY JOINT TENANT OR TENANT IN COMMON. — Upon the question whether or not the possession of one of several cotenants affords constructive notice of the rights of the others, the authorities are few and conflicting. It has been held that while information that a tenant in common of lands is holding under his cotenant might well be constructive notice of the latter's title, yet the possession of a tenant in common is of itself notice only of his own title; the reason being that he is presumed to hold in his own right, and not in the right of his cotenant.⁴ But, on the contrary, the possession of one of several cotenants or joint owners, if not inconsistent with the rights of the others, purchaser would learn nothing. Cornell v. Maltby, 165 N. Y. 557, affirming 35 N. Y. App. Div. 630.

Where the Vendor Remaining in Possession Encourages the Subsequent Sale, and assures the purchaser that the vendee has full right to sell, the rule of the text cannot apply and the purchaser will be protected. Broussard v. Broussard, 45 La. Ann. 1085.

has been held to operate as constructive notice of the rights of all.¹ So, where the legal title to land was held in trust for several beneficiaries, the occupation and use of the land by one of them was held to be constructive notice of the rights of all; and it was held that in such a case the possession need not be inconsistent with that of the person holding the legal title.²

dd. POSSESSION BY HUSBAND AND WIFE. — It has been held that the possession of land by a husband and wife is regarded as joint by reason of the family relation, and that such possession will operate as notice of the wife's equities in the land as against all persons other than those claiming under the husband.³ So, where the land is in the possession of the husband and the wife, under an equitable title in the wife arising from contract of purchase, payment of the consideration and erection of improvements, a purchaser or mortgagee of the wife's vendor is chargeable with constructive notice of the wife's title, whether the possession is considered as that of the husband, or of the wife, or of both.⁴ But possession by the husband and wife will not impart notice of the wife's equities to persons claiming under the husband,⁵ especially where he apparently holds the legal title and it does not clearly appear that his acts of possession and user are performed on the behalf of the wife.⁶ Neither will it afford notice to a purchaser or mortgagee from another member of the family, as a son who holds the legal title against which the wife's equity is sought to be enforced, but who does not hold the legal possession of the property and is not a joint occupant thereof with his parents.⁷

In Georgia the rule appears to be settled that when husband and wife are living together upon land used and controlled by the husband, the possession is presumptively in him, as the head of the family, and the joint possession will not alone be sufficient to give notice of any claim or interest in the land by the wife, either to a purchaser or mortgagee from the husband⁸ or from a third person.⁹

Possession by Husband After Separation. — Where the wife has separated from her husband and is living apart from him, his possession and use of land as his homestead affords notice of his claim of ownership to a purchaser from the wife.¹⁰

Husband in Possession of Wife's Separate Property. — Where a husband is in possession of lands belonging to his wife's statutory separate estate, his possession is to be referred to his representative capacity as trustee, and constitutes constructive notice of her title.¹¹ And the rule is not affected by the fact that before she acquired title, and before his possession began thereunder, he occupied the land as tenant of her vendor.¹²

ee. POSSESSION BY WOMAN AS HEAD OF FAMILY. — Where the premises in question are occupied by a woman who is the head of the family, and the legal title is held by her minor son who lives with her, the possession of the mother affords constructive notice of her equities in the land, to one who purchases from the son.¹³ user of land by a person other than the grantor must, in order to afford notice, be open, notorious, and exclusive; it must be unambiguous and unequivocal; it must be under claim of right; in short, like other matters from which constructive notice is sought to be imputed, it must be of such a character as will excite inquiry upon the part of a purchaser and will lead him in the exercise of due diligence to knowledge of the adverse rights in question.¹ Thus, where a particular claim is notorious and sufficient to account for the possession, the purchaser is under no duty to inquire as to the existence of some other claim.² Similarly it has been held that where the inquiry reveals the fact that the parties in possession claim under a lease which was made subsequent to an absolute conveyance to the proposed grantor, the purchaser is not bound to make further inquiry.³ And in any event the possession of land will operate as notice only of the right or title by or under which the possession is held, and will not afford notice of any claims or equities unconnected therewith.⁴ Yet possession sufficient to constitute constructive notice may be evidenced by any facts which clearly show an appropriation of the property to the use of the person claiming it.⁵ The occupancy need not have all the characteristics of adverse possession under the limitation laws.⁶ The extent and character of the property, and the uses to which it may be put, are obviously matters of considerable importance in determining whether or not the occupancy of it is sufficient to put a purchaser upon inquiry,⁷ and it is considered that any acts of possession and user, if they are all that the property, by reason of its character, is susceptible of, will, if otherwise sufficient, constitute notice to the purchaser.¹

bb. MUST BE A PRESENT POSSESSION. — In order for possession to constitute notice it must be a present possession, existing at the time of the purchase which is sought to be impeached.² But if the possession existed at the time of the contract of purchase, it is sufficient notice, though it had ceased before the conveyance was made.³

cc. MUST BE A CONTINUOUS POSSESSION. — The occupancy and user must be continuous, or at least as continuous as the nature of the premises and of the right claimed will admit.⁴ But the actual, visible possession need not be absolutely continuous and unbroken; for once having begun it continues, in legal contemplation, until the occupant's conduct affords evidence of intentional abandonment; and if there has been no such abandonment, and if the occupant has continued to exercise unequivocal acts of dominion or ownership over the land and is so doing at the time of the conveyance, the possession is sufficient to constitute notice.⁵

dd. MUST BE INCONSISTENT WITH APPARENT TITLE OF GRANTOR — (aa) Principle Stated. — The possession must be inconsistent with the apparent or record title of the grantor, else it will not be sufficient to impose upon the purchaser the duty of making further inquiry; the reason being that in such a case the possession is presumed to be under the grantor's title.⁶

Possession by Life Tenant and Sale by Remainderman. — The rule of the text is applicable to a sale by a remainderman where the life tenant

(bb) Necessity for Change of Possession at Prior Sale. — Where it is sought to impute to a purchaser notice of a prior sale or conveyance of the land by the same grantor, and possession by the prior purchaser or his tenant is relied upon to constitute notice, it has been held that in order for the possession to operate as notice there must have been a visible change in the occupancy at the time of the first purchase or conveyance; that otherwise there is nothing in the character of the possession that would suggest to the purchaser's mind the existence of any rights in the land other than those held by the vendor or his tenants. Therefore, where both the vendor and the vendee are in possession of the property at the time of the first purchase, and there is no change in the possession thereafter, both continuing to occupy the land, the possession of the vendee is not notice of his title to a subsequent purchaser from the vendor.¹ Likewise, where a purchaser under a title bond leaves the vendor in possession as his tenant, and the vendor afterwards sells the land to another, the last purchaser is not chargeable with notice of the prior sale by reason of the vendor's continued possession.²

Vendor in Possession by Tenant — Attornment to Vendee Not Sufficient. — Where at the time of the prior sale the vendor was in possession by a tenant, and after the sale the tenant remains in possession as before and merely attorns to the purchaser, it has been held in some jurisdictions that the tenant's possession is not of itself sufficient to affect a subsequent purchaser from the same vendor with notice of the title of the landlord, i. e., the prior purchaser; the possession of the tenant still being, to all appearances, the possession of the vendor.³ The foregoing rule has been briefly stated to be that in order that the possession of a tenant may be notice of his landlord's title, the tenancy must have begun after the title of the landlord was acquired.⁴ But in a number of other jurisdictions where this question has arisen, the foregoing doctrine has not been recognized; but it has been held that where a vendor's tenant in possession merely attorns to the vendee without any apparent change in the occupancy or in its character, the possession is nevertheless sufficient to excite inquiry in the mind of a subsequent purchaser from the vendor, and thus to charge him with constructive notice of the prior vendee's title.⁵ is in possession, since a remainderman is not entitled to possession in his own right until the death of the life tenant. Wallace v. Jones, 93 Ga. 421.

Tenants in Common. — So where several tenants in common in possession under title of record purchased the undivided interest of another cotenant not in possession, their continuance in possession of the land without visible change in the character of the occupancy was held not to afford notice of their title to one who claimed under the cotenant who sold. *May v. ee. OCCUPANT MUST HAVE STANDING IN EQUITY. — The principle of constructive notice by possession is intended to protect only those persons who in justice ought to be protected in a court of equity; and while it may be applied to protect an occupant with equitable rights, it may not be invoked on behalf of one who has no equity,¹ especially in a case where the occupant seeks the aid of the doctrine to cover his own fraud or misrepresentations.²

(4) By Instruments Relating to Title — aa. GENERAL RULE. — A purchaser or mortgagee is affected with constructive notice of all facts appearing in the recitals contained in any and all written instruments relating to the title of the property he is about to acquire, and where any instrument in the chain of title refers to any other instrument also in the chain of title or material thereto, he is chargeable with notice of all the facts that it recites, and will not be heard to say that he did not read the writing in question. In other words, a purchaser is fixed with constructive notice of whatever appears in the conveyances constituting his chain of title.³

Rule Applied to Charge Purchaser with Notice of Reservation of Timber by Prior Deed. — Wait v. Baldwin, 60 Mich. 622, 1 Am. St. Rep. 551.

A Deed Executed in a Foreign State and embracing lands situated there is within the rule of the text; and the purchaser from the grantee in such a deed is bound to ascertain the effect which the deed would have under the lex situs. Bernard v. Scott, 12 La. Ann. 489.

Rule Applied to One Who Purchases from an Heir and Has Notice of the Decedent's Will. — Smith v. Bonnisteel, 13 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 29; McIntosh v. Ontario Bank, 19 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 155. See also Bakewell v. Ogden, 2 Bush (Ky.) 265.

Mortgagor and Mortgagee. — The recitals in the deed under which a mortgagor holds the land are constructive notice to a mortgagee. Steere v. Childs, 15 Hun (N. Y.) 511; Wells v. Houston, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 629.

Rule Applicable to Lessees and Purchasers of Leasehold Estates. — Patman v. Harland, 17 Ch. D. 353.

And such a purchaser is chargeable with notice of the clauses and covenants in the lease. Walter v. Maunde, 1 Jac. & W. 181, 21 Rev. Rep. 141; Vaughan v. Magill, 12 Ir. Eq. 207; Smith v. Capron, 7 Hare 189; Butler v. Portarlington, 1 Dr. & War. 20, 4 Ir. Eq. 1. See also Smith v. Watts, 4 Drew. 338, 28 L. J. Ch. 220, 7 W. R. 126; Wilson v. Hart, L. R. 1 Ch. 463, 35 L. J. Ch. 569.

And the rule applies to charge a purchaser of an underlease with notice of covenants in the original lease. Cosser v. Collinge, 3 Myl. & K. 283, 1 L. J. Ch. 130; Flight v. Barton, 3 Myl. & K. 282. See also Camberwell, etc., Bldg. Soc. v. Holloway, 13 Ch. D. 754, 49 L. J. Ch. 361, 41 L. T. N. S. 752, 28 W. R. 222. Compare Wilbraham v. Livesey, 18 Beav. 206; Hanbury v. Litchfield, 2 Myl. & K. 633.

Likewise a lessee or the purchaser of a leasehold estate is affected with notice by recitals in a deed forming part of the title of his lessor or vendor. Patman v. Harland, 17 Ch. D. 353, 50 L. J. Ch. 642.

And in England the principle that a lessee under such circumstances has constructive notice of his lessor's title has not been altered by the Vendor and Purchaser Act of 1874, § 2, subsec. 1; but a lessee is in the same position as regards notice as if before that statute he had stipulated not to inquire into his lessor's title; that is, he is charged with constructive notice. Patman v. Harland, 17 Ch. D. 353.

Deed Executed by Attorney or Agent. — Where a deed is executed in the name of the grantor by another person as his attorney or agent, the grantee is chargeable with knowledge that a power of attorney existed, and with constructive notice of the contents of that instrument, and of any limitations therein as to the attorney's authority to convey. Kingsland v. Chetwood, 39 Hun (N. Y.) 602; Morris v. Terrell, 2 Rand. (Va.) 6. See also Green v. Hugo, 81 Tex. 452, 26 Am. St. Rep. 824; Hagerman v. Sutton, 91 Mo. 519; Swarthout v. Curtis, 5 N. Y. 301, 55 Am. Dec. 345 (unauthorized discharge of mortgage by guardian).

Sale by Trustees under Power in Will. — A like rule applies to a sale by trustees under a power given by a will. Bakewell v. Ogden, 2 Bush (Ky.) 265.

is, nevertheless, chargeable with the notice that he might have obtained.¹ He is excused from failure to make inquiry only where the claim for the unpaid purchase money has been barred by the statute of limitations.²

bb. QUALIFICATIONS OF RULE — (aa) In General. — In order to impute constructive notice to a purchaser by reason of recitals in instruments affecting his title, the recitals relied upon must be so clear and distinct as to put an ordinarily prudent person upon inquiry, and must be so far correct and intelligible that upon proper inquiry they would lead the purchaser to knowledge of the particular fact or incumbrance with notice of which it is sought to charge him.³

Knowledge of an Intention to Execute an Instrument relating to the property does not constitute notice of the contents of the instrument after it is executed.⁴

(bb) Instrument Must Relate to Chain of Title. — The rule that a purchaser is chargeable with constructive notice of the contents of all instruments appearing in his chain of title does not apply to instruments that do not constitute a part of his chain of title, and do not necessarily relate to it; as to the contents of such instruments the purchaser is not put upon inquiry.⁵

cc. BY QUITCLAIM DEED — (aa) MAJORITY RULE. — By the prevailing weight of authority the grantee in a quitclaim deed cannot be accorded the favored position of a purchaser for value and without notice; the reason being that the instrument purports to convey only such interest as the grantor may then have in the property, and thus by its own terms puts the purchaser upon inquiry as to any and all defects that may exist in the title, by way of outstanding incumbrances, equities, and the like.⁶

(bb) Qualifications of Rule — Deed Purporting to Convey Absolute Title. — The rule that a grantee in a quitclaim deed is chargeable with notice of all defects in the title applies only to such deeds as are clearly intended to convey only "a chance of title," or such right, title, and interest as the grantor may possess; and a deed which is apparently only a quitclaim deed may be shown to have been intended to operate as an absolute conveyance of the full title to the land, the circumstances under which it is made and the purposes for which it is given being considered important elements in determining its true character. If, therefore, it clearly appears that the deed was intended to operate as an absolute conveyance of the property, and the grantee purchased for value and without other notice than that afforded by the character of the instrument, he will be entitled to protection as a bona fide purchaser.¹ There appears to be no authority holding that a grantee must take a deed with covenants of general warranty in order to claim protection as a purchaser for value and without notice.²

Ascertaining Purport of Deed. — The mere use of the word "quitclaim" in a deed purporting to convey the land does not restrict its effect, and the grantee therein may be a bona fide purchaser.³ And whether the conveyance in question was intended to be a mere quitclaim deed or a conveyance of the land itself is not to be determined merely by an omission of a covenant of general warranty, but the character of the deed may be ascertained not only from its own terms, but from other circumstances attending the transaction

The Rule of the Text Applies to One Who Agreed to Take a Quitclaim Deed, but by mistake prepared and took a deed with special warranty "by, through, and under the vendor." Tate v. Kramer, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 427.

The Tender of a Quitclaim Deed by the apparent owner of the land to one who contemplates purchase is sufficient to put the latter upon inquiry, and he is therefore chargeable with notice of any defect of title that he might readily have ascertained by inquiry. Dodge v. Briggs, 27 Fed. Rep. 161.

and tending to show the real intent and purpose of the instrument.¹ Although the acceptance of a special warranty deed may be a circumstance from which constructive notice may be imputed to the purchaser, it is open to explanation.² Where a deed contains a clause of warranty and purports, moreover, to make a full and perfect conveyance of the land, the warranty does not strengthen or enlarge the title conveyed, but only evidences a separate contract by which a grantor binds himself to pay damages upon failure of title.³

Where Inquiry Would Be Futile. — The inference of notice arising from the fact that the purchaser acquired title by a quitclaim deed is one that may be rebutted by showing that under the circumstances of the case the inquiry which the character of the deed suggested would not have led the purchaser, in the exercise of due diligence, to the knowledge of any rights adverse to his title.⁴

Purchaser under Warranty Deed from Grantee in Quitclaim Deed. — Although the grantor may have been chargeable with notice and thus affected by prior equities by reason of the fact that the conveyance to him was by quitclaim deed, yet if he sells land to a purchaser for value and conveys to him by a warranty deed, the purchaser, unless otherwise chargeable with notice, is entitled to protection.⁵ And similarly, the fact that in the chain of title a quitclaim deed appears among the mesne conveyances to the grantor is not sufficient to charge the purchaser with constructive notice.⁶

(cc) Rule as Affected by Statutes. — In some jurisdictions the statutes provide that a quitclaim deed, unless limited to a less interest, shall pass the entire estate of the grantor as effectually as a deed of bargain and sale. Under such statutes it has been held that a grantee in a quitclaim deed may be protected as a purchaser for value and without notice.⁷

Recording Acts. — In some jurisdictions the rule that a grantee in a quitclaim deed is not entitled to protection as a bona fide purchaser has been materially altered by the recording acts; and it is held that a grantee in such a deed may obtain, as against a prior unrecorded conveyance or incumbrance, the protection afforded by the statute to bona fide purchasers.⁸ In other jurisdictions,

4. A Deed of Bargain and Sale Containing Covenants against acts of the grantor purports to pass the whole estate; and the fact that it contains only a limited warranty, or indeed no warranty at all, does not of itself impute constructive notice to the purchaser; the reason being that the warranty forms no part of a conveyance, a perfect title passing without it. however, the rule has not been altered by the recording acts.¹

(dd) Minority Rule. — In some jurisdictions the rule that a grantee in a quitclaim deed is not a bona fide purchaser is altogether repudiated, it being held that the character of the deed is of importance only as a circumstance to be taken into consideration with others in ascertaining whether the purchaser was chargeable with notice.²

(5) By Inadequacy of Consideration. — Inadequacy of price is material in ascertaining whether the purchaser had notice of any defect in the title, and where the price was grossly inadequate that circumstance alone has been held sufficient to suggest to the mind of the purchaser that the title was defective, and thus to charge him with constructive notice.³ It is clear, also, that gross inadequacy of price may be considered with other circumstances as a ground for imputing to the purchaser notice of adverse rights or defects in the title.⁴

(6) By Matters of General Repute. — While it is well settled that vague rumors and indefinite statements are insufficient to put a purchaser upon inquiry,⁵ yet where the existence of adverse equities or other defects in the title is a matter of common repute or the subject of common conversation, this circumstance is admissible in evidence as tending to show that the purchaser had knowledge or the means of acquiring knowledge of the adverse rights in question.⁶

The rule of the text applies where the inadequacy of the consideration was in the conveyance to the purchaser's grantor. Knowledge of such a circumstance is sufficient to put the purchaser upon inquiry. Gaines v. Saunders, 50 Ark. 322; Hume v. Franzen, 73 Iowa 25; Webber v. Taylor, 2 Jones Eq. (55 N. Car.) 9.

A wife who took a conveyance of land from her husband, and was conversant with the terms on which he bought the land, was held not to be a bona fide purchaser where the conveyance to her was in furtherance of an attempt to procure the property for an inadequate consideration. Williams v. Hamilton, 104 Iowa 423, 65 Am. St. Rep. 475.

Gross inadequacy of price may be submitted to a jury as a question of fact from which notice may be inferred. Hume v. Ware, 87 Tex. 380.

But where the price paid is a substantial sum, its inadequacy alone is not sufficient to charge the purchaser with notice. Wallace v. Jones, 93 Ga. 420; Sheldon v. Holmes, 58 Mich. 138; Stewart's Appeal, 98 Pa. St. 377.

Thus, nine thousand dollars given for land worth eighteen thousand is not so inadequate a price as to furnish a ground for imputing notice to the purchaser. Fish v. Benson, 71 Cal. 428.

Notice by Reputation of Ownership — Statute. — An Oregon statute (Hill's Code, § 776, subd. 12) provides that a person is presumed to be the owner of property from his exercising acts

(7) From Whom Information Must Proceed. — It has been stated broadly that notice, in order to be binding upon the purchaser, must proceed from some one having an interest in the property, and that information imparted by a stranger will not charge the purchaser with notice.¹ But this statement is too broad to be accurate, and the correct principle is that while the information coming from a stranger must be more specific and direct than that coming from a party in interest,² the sole question involved is whether it is so authentic as to charge the purchaser's conscience with the duty of making inquiry, and so definite as to lead him, in the exercise of due diligence, to a knowledge of the adverse rights affecting the property; if the information is sufficient to do this, then it will charge the purchaser with constructive notice, and it is immaterial whether it proceeds from a party in interest or from a total stranger to the title.³

(8) Discharge of Duty to Make Inquiry — (a) Failure to Discover Adverse Rights. — Where a purchaser, having been put upon inquiry, exercises due diligence by following the line of inquiry suggested, and either fails to discover the existence of any adverse rights, or becomes satisfied that his suspicions were unwarranted, or that some change in the circumstances had obviated the grounds of his apprehension, he will not be chargeable with notice.⁴ Thus, where a purchaser having information that a person other than the vendor is in possession of the land exercises due diligence in investigating the nature of the occupant's possession, and fails to gain knowledge of the possessor's rights, the notice afforded by the possession cannot be asserted against him.⁵ Likewise, where a purchaser is put upon inquiry by the circumstance that a tenant is in possession of the land, and after making due inquiry fails to discover the fact and circumstances of the tenancy, he will not be chargeable with notice of the landlord's title.⁶

(b) Misrepresentation by Occupant of the Land. — The law of constructive notice cannot be so applied as to relieve a party from responsibility for his own misstatement, or to protect him where he has wilfully misled the purchaser.⁷

of ownership over it, or from common reputation of his ownership. Whether or not common reputation of ownership under the statute serves the same purpose as possession of the land in giving constructive notice, it is held that such "reputation" as the statute contemplated would not have the effect of affording constructive notice to a person residing outside of the community in which the land is situated, as for instance, at a distance of five or six miles from the land. Raymond v. Flavel, 27 Oregon 248.

1. View that Notice Must Proceed from Party in Interest. — Barnhart v. Greenshields, 9 Moo. P. C. 18. See also Parkhurst v. Hosford, 10 Sawy. (U. S.) 401, 21 Fed. Rep. 827.

2. Information from Stranger Must Be Clear. — Wilcox v. Hill, 11 Mich. 256.

3. Information from Stranger May Charge Purchaser with Notice. — Wilcox v. Hill, 11 Mich. 256; Butcher v. Yocum, 61 Pa. St. 168, 100 Am. Dec. 625; Martel v. Somers, 26 Tex. 560; McNames v. Phillips, 9 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 314.

Notice Given to a Purchaser by the Tenant in Possession under the Claimant is sufficient. Gallion v. M'Caslin, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 90, 12 Am. Dec. 208.

4. See generally the title NOTICE, vol. 21, p. 588.

But a Mortgagee Who Was Informed that There Were "Charges" Affecting the Property, and knew of two only, which he believed to be all that existed, was held bound to inquire whether there were any other charges than those two; and as a result of his failure to make such further inquiry was held chargeable with notice of other incumbrances. Jones v. Williams, 24 Beav. 47.

While a False or a Reasonable Answer Given in Response to an Inquiry by the purchaser may under proper circumstances dispense with the necessity of further inquiry, yet, where no inquiry at all has been made, it is impossible to conclude that a false or misleading answer would have been given, and the purchaser is therefore chargeable with notice by reason of his failure to inquire. Jones v. Williams, 24 Beav. 47.

The Deed to Grantor in Which He Was Described as "Trustee" was held to have put the purchaser on inquiry; but the purchaser having used due diligence in following up the line of inquiry suggested, and having obtained information that allayed his suspicions, it was held that he was entitled to protection. Mercantile Nat. Bank v. Parsons, 54 Minn. 56, 40 Am St. Rep. 299.

5. Fruitless Inquiry from Occupant of Premises. — Fair v. Stevenot, 29 Cal. 486; Thompson v. Pioche, 44 Cal. 508; Rogers v. Jones, 8 N. H. 264. See also Emeric v. Alvarado, 90 Cal. 447; Nutting v. Herbert, 37 N. H. 346; Cavin v. Middleton, 63 Iowa 618.

7. See the title NOTICE, vol. 21, p. 588.

Thus, it is the duty of a person in possession of land, when interrogated concerning his rights by one intending to purchase, to disclose the whole truth; and if by misrepresentation or suppression of a material fact he misleads the purchaser, he is thereby estopped from afterwards asserting as against the purchaser's title the claim or equity he ought to have disclosed.¹

Tenant Disclaiming Title. — Similarly, where a tenant in possession, upon being interrogated by the purchaser, disclaims all title or interest in the premises, his possession cannot thereafter operate as notice of a claim by him collateral to the terms of his tenancy.²

Tenant Disclaiming Landlord's Title. — But on the other hand, in a case where notice of the landlord's title was sought to be imputed to a purchaser by reason of a tenant's possession, and the purchaser was told by the tenant that he was holding under another person than the one whose title was sought to be asserted, it was held that the purchaser was, nevertheless, affected with notice of the landlord's title, the reason assigned being that a tenant cannot deny the title of his landlord to the latter's prejudice.³

(c) Making Inquiry of Vendor. — A purchaser who is put upon inquiry does not discharge his duty by making inquiry of his vendor alone, but must exhaust all reasonable and available sources of information.⁴

Misstatement by Vendor. — Consequently, the fact that the purchaser has been misled by false statements by his vendor is not sufficient to protect him.⁵

(d) Relying on Possession by Vendor. — Whether a purchaser is justified in relying upon the possession of the land by his vendor appears to be unsettled. Probably the better rule is that announced in England and Missouri, the principle being that since real estate is held by title and not by mere possession, a purchaser is not justified in relying simply upon his vendor's possession of the land without other evidence of title, and if he makes no further inquiry he will be chargeable with gross negligence, and will be deemed to have had notice of defects in the title, or of prior equities affecting the land.⁶ In Illinois, however, it is held that where a purchaser finds his vendor in possession either in person or by a tenant, he has the right to assume that such possession was rightfully obtained unless he has knowledge or information to the contrary; and if he has no such knowledge or information he will be protected in his purchase, even though his grantor's possession turns out to be wrongful.⁷

(e) Where Inquiry Would Be Futile. — Where, under the circumstances relied upon to charge a purchaser with constructive notice, inquiry by him would have been futile, in that by the exercise of due diligence he would not have discovered the adverse rights in question, the fact that he failed to make any investigation will not operate to his prejudice, and he will be regarded as having purchased without notice.⁸ Thus, although a person other than the vendor is in possession of the land, yet if the circumstances are such that due diligence by the purchaser in making inquiry as to the rights of the occupant would not result in his ascertaining the existence of adverse rights or equities,

Where the rule otherwise it would be in the power of any agent, tenant, or mere trespasser to deprive the true owner of his property by selling it. Dudley v. Witter, 46 Ala. 694.

v. Spraker, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 196. Compare Jones v. Powles, 3 Myl. & K. 581.

he will not be chargeable with constructive notice by reason of his failure to make the inquiry.¹

b. NOTICE TO PERSON IN SPECIAL CAPACITY. — The rules governing notice given to persons acting in a special capacity are applicable to purchasers of real property and are fully discussed elsewhere in this work.²

c. NOTICE IN PARTICULAR TRANSACTION. — The question whether notice received by a person in a particular transaction will affect him in a subsequent and independent transaction in which he becomes a purchaser is fully discussed elsewhere in this work.³

d. NOTICE TO PURCHASERS TAKING PROPERTY IN COMMON. — In the absence of proof of partnership or agency, it appears to be a settled rule that notice to one of several purchasers taking title as joint tenants or tenants in common will not by mere force of their relationship operate as notice to the others.⁴

e. NOTICE TO PARTNER PURCHASING FOR FIRM. — The general rule that notice to one of several copartners is notice to the firm⁵ is peculiarly applicable to purchasers of real property; and in this connection the rule has been so extended that in a case of a purchase of land by a partner for the benefit of the firm, notice imputed to the firm from notice to the partner has been held to operate as notice to another member of the firm who afterwards acquired the land as his individual property.⁶

f. NOTICE OF VOID OR UNENFORCEABLE CLAIMS. — Notice of an incumbrance, claim, or right void or unenforceable in law is, of course, inoperative,⁷ and notice of an invalid conveyance cannot make it good as against a purchaser for value.⁸ Similarly, knowledge of a prior contract of sale, unenforceable under the statute of frauds, and voidable at the option of the vendor therein, can have no effect as against a purchaser of the legal title for value,⁹ the reason being that by subsequently selling the land the grantor elects to treat his former contract as void.¹⁰

3. Effect of Notice — a. IN GENERAL. — It is an elementary proposition that a purchaser with notice occupies no higher position than his vendor and takes the property subject to all outstanding rights or equities with notice of which he is chargeable.¹¹

Grantor a Bona Fide Purchaser. — The foregoing proposition must, however, be taken with the qualification that the grantor must not have been a purchaser without notice; for if he was, the grantee, though taking with notice, is entitled to protection.¹

b. NOTICE BEFORE COMPLETION OF PURCHASE — (1) General Rule. — It has frequently been stated as a broad and general rule that if at any time before the sale is completed and while the purchaser can without damage abandon his contract and withdraw from the transaction, actual or constructive notice of a prior equity is received by him, and he thereafter completes his purchase, his claim to protection as a bona fide purchaser is defeated. In other words, the purchase must be completed by payment and conveyance before notice is received, and notice either before the purchase money is paid or before title is acquired will deprive the purchaser of protection in equity.¹ The reason assigned for this rule is that after notice of the prior equity the completion of the purchase is in fraud of the prior claimant.²

(2) Applications of Rule — (a) Introductory Statement. — Generally this rule is applied where the notice has been received at any stage of the transaction before actual completion of the purchase; but there is considerable conflict of authority with respect to the extent of its application, and in some instances, through considerations of natural justice and equity, its rigor is modified to suit the exigencies of the particular state of facts under which its enforcement is sought. These matters are set forth in the following paragraphs of this subdivision.

(b) Notice Before Conveyance. — In accordance with the general principle above stated, it is a general rule that notice received before the purchaser has acquired the legal title to the property by conveyance deprives him of any right to protection as a purchaser for value and without notice.³

(c) Notice Before Conveyance but After Payment. — As a general rule, the purchaser is not entitled to protection if he receives notice before he acquires title by conveyance, even though before notice he has paid the entire purchase price.⁴ And the same principle applies a fortiori to a case where part payment has been made before notice.⁵

(d) Acquiring Legal Title After Notice — aa. GENERAL RULE. — As a consequence of the foregoing propositions it has been deduced as a general rule in the United States that if the purchaser has not obtained the legal title before notice of the prior equity, even though by contract and payment without notice he has acquired an equitable title, he cannot after notice acquire the legal estate and thereby defeat or postpone the prior equity, unless his own equity is of superior merit; but in order to produce such a result he must acquire not only the equitable but the legal title, without notice.¹

bb. QUALIFICATION OF RULE. — But where the purchaser has acquired an equity superior in merit to the prior claim, he may then gain additional protection to his rights by acquiring the legal title, even after notice, for having the better equity he would be protected irrespective of his ownership of the legal estate.²

cc. MINORITY RULE. — Although by the weight of authority in the United States a purchaser of a merely equitable title cannot, after notice of a prior equity, protect himself by acquiring the legal estate, yet it is held in England and in some of the United States, in analogy to the doctrine of tacking, that when a purchaser has for value and without notice acquired an equitable title he may thereafter, even with notice of the prior equity, acquire the legal estate or an outstanding legal interest, and be entitled to full protection as a bona fide purchaser;³ provided, however, that in so doing he does not become a party to a breach of trust.⁴ And in accordance with this doctrine Purchaser of Equity Must Pay Value for Legal Title. — And he must acquire the legal title not only without notice but for value. Paying value for the equitable title is not sufficient. Goldsborough v. Turner, 67 N. Car. 403.

The Burden of Proving Notice in such a case is upon the holder of the prior equity. Dodd v. Doty, 98 Ill. 393. And see infra, this title, Evidence and Burden of Proof.

Character of Notice Required. — In order for the rule of the text to apply the notice must be sufficiently clear and definite to indicate with some degree of certainty the specific property in question; and knowledge of a prior written contract by the vendor to convey to a stranger will not be sufficient where the terms of the contract are so vague and indefinite as not to refer clearly to the particular property to be affected thereby. Lewis v. Madison, 1 Munf. (Va.) 303.

Acquiring Legal Title in Right of Another. — The subsequent acquisition of the legal title in the right of another person will not aid the holder of the subsequent equity. Wing v. McDowell, Walk. (Mich.) 175.

it has been held that where before notice the purchaser has paid part of the price and gone into possession under the contract, he may thereafter complete his purchase by paying the balance and taking a conveyance, and can be deprived of the estate thus acquired only on condition of being reimbursed for the sums paid before notice.¹

(e) Notice After Conveyance and Before Payment. — Where the purchaser has taken a conveyance of the legal title before notice, but receives notice before paying any part of the purchase money, his claim to protection is defeated. Notice before payment in such a case is equivalent to notice before the contract.² And the purchaser will not be protected in payments made by him after notice, for in making such payments he acts in his own wrong and in fraud of the prior claimant.³

(f) Notice After Conveyance and Part Payment — aa. GENERAL RULE. — Where notice is received by the purchaser after he has taken a conveyance of the legal title and has paid or performed part of the consideration, the general rule is that he will be protected to the extent of the consideration advanced before notice, but not as to the rest; in brief, he is entitled to protection pro tanto.⁴ And if after notice the purchaser makes further payments, he makes them in his own wrong, and as to the sums thus paid he is not entitled to protection.¹

Method of Protection. — While the purchaser is entitled to protection as to payments made before notice, no very definite rule can be formulated to govern the manner in which he shall be protected. In some cases he has not been permitted to keep the land free and clear of the prior equity, but has been held entitled to have a lien upon it or to hold it as security for reimbursement of the sums that he paid before notice.² In other cases he has been permitted to keep the land, but subject to the lien of the prior equity to the extent of the purchase money unpaid.³ And in a proper case the purchaser may bring the unpaid balance into court and be permitted to hold the land free and clear of the prior equity.⁴ But the mode of protection to which he is entitled largely depends upon the circumstances of the particular case and rests in the sound discretion of the court,⁵ the amount of the payments made before notice, and the nature of the adverse equity being obviously matters of considerable importance.⁶

Seeing to Application of Purchase Money. — It has been held, however, that if the purchaser sees to the application of the payments made after notice he may be protected in full, but that if he fails to do so, his course in paying after notice constitutes an act of bad faith which contaminates the whole transaction from the beginning and is sufficient ground for the refusal of protection even as to such payments as he made before notice. *Fraim v. Purchase of Equity of Redemption by Mortgagee — Notice After Part Payment. — A mortgagee of the legal title for value and without notice is protected in his title from the lien of his mortgagor's vendor for unpaid purchase money, and he may purchase the equity of redemption even after notice of the lien if the consideration for such purchase be given before notice; but the lien may be enforced against the land to the extent of any sums which he may have paid as consideration after notice. *Duval v. vail; not only must the purchaser have taken a conveyance, but the whole of the purchase money must have been paid before notice, else the purchaser will be entitled to no protection whatever; and it seems that part payment before notice does not alter the rule.¹

c. NOTICE AFTER COMPLETION OF PURCHASE. — If the purchase has been completed by payment of the purchase money or other consideration, and by transfer of title by conveyance before any notice, actual or constructive, is received by the purchaser, notice thereafter brought home to him is inoperative to affect his right to protection in the estate he has acquired.²

VI. EVIDENCE AND BURDEN OF PROOF — 1. In General. — The general rule is that notice is a fact the existence of which is to be established by evidence, either direct or circumstantial, in the same manner as the existence of any other fact is established.³

2. Burden of Proof. — Where a purchase of land is sought to be impeached by the holder of a prior right or equity, the question of the burden of proof has given rise to much conflict in the authorities.

Rule that Burden of Proof Rests upon Purchaser. — One line of authorities holds that inasmuch as the plea of purchase for value and without notice is an affirmative defense, the person pleading it must sustain his position by requisite proof; in other words, that the onus probandi rests upon the purchaser.⁴ But on the other hand it has been decided that in the absence of evidence to the contrary the law will presume a grantee in a deed to be a bona fide purchaser, and that the burden of overcoming the presumption rests upon the person seeking to impeach the conveyance or the title.⁵

1. Payment in Full Must Be Made Before Notice. — Tourville v. Naish, 3 P. Wms. 306; Gallion v. M'Caslin, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 91, 12 Am. Dec. 208; Dugan v. Vattier, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 245, 25 Am. In Canada the doctrine of the text was recognized in Henderson v. Graves, 2 U. C. Err. & App. 21, but as to some of the purchasers involved it was held to be inapplicable by reason of the peculiar facts of the case. As to other purchasers, however, it was applied. See pp. 24, 25.

The Sufficiency of the Facts relied upon to constitute notice presents a question which may be submitted to a jury (see the cases in the foregoing note and the cross-reference there given), or may be submitted to the court sitting as a jury. Shumate v. Reavis, 49 Mo. 336.

The Question Whether There Is Competent Evidence of notice is for the court; and where the facts in evidence are uncontroverted the courts must determine whether they constitute sufficient notice. See the title NOTICE, vol. 21, p. 589.

Where the Existence of Notice Is Apparent on the Pleadings, a finding by the jury that the purchaser bought without notice is a matter of no legal significance, and does not prevent the rendition of such a decree as is authorized by the other facts found and admitted. *Tankard v. 5. Grantee Presumed to Be Bona Fide Purchaser. — Anthony v. Wheeler, 130 Ill. 128, 17 Am.

As to Payment of Consideration. — In a number of cases where the question whether a consideration had been paid was the matter in issue, it has been held that the burden of proving payment rested upon the purchaser.¹ But there is authority for the proposition that the holder of the prior equity must prove that no consideration was paid.²

As to Notice. — There is another line of authorities holding that the burden of proving notice to the purchaser rests upon the person asserting its existence.³ But on the contrary there are cases holding that the purchaser must prove want of notice.⁴

"Shifting" of Burden of Proof. — It has been held that the rule as to proof of a bona fide purchase is that the party making the defense must first make satisfactory proof of his purchase and of his payment of the consideration, this being an affirmative defensive matter in the nature of confession and avoidance, and the burden of proving it, therefore, resting upon him who asserts it; but that this being done, the purchaser need not go further and prove that he made the purchase and paid the consideration without notice. At this point it is said that the burden of proof shifts to the person seeking to impeach the purchaser's title, and in order that the claimant may prevail he must prove that before the completion of the purchase the purchaser had actual or constructive notice of the complainant's lien or equity.⁵ But on the other hand, where the facts and circumstances are such as to raise an inference of notice in the purchaser, it devolves upon him to prove affirmatively that he did not have notice.⁶

Where Grantor Was Guilty of Fraud. — In cases where the grantor was guilty of fraud, as in fraudulently obtaining title, the rule appears to be settled that the burden rests upon the purchaser to show that he acquired title in good faith, for value and without notice.⁷

3. Recital in Deed as Evidence of Payment. — It appears to be a general rule that a recital in the purchaser's deed that the purchase money or other consideration for the conveyance has been paid is not evidence of the fact of payment as against a stranger to the deed who claims adversely to the purchaser and under a prior right, and hence that to sustain the defense of purchase for value and without notice payment of the consideration must be established by evidence other than the recital in the instrument of conveyance.¹ There is much authority, however, supporting the proposition that the recital in a deed that the consideration has been paid is prima facie evidence of the fact, even as against strangers to the instrument, and consequently is competent to show the fact in favor of the purchaser as against the claimant of a prior right or title.² But even in a jurisdiction where such a recital is prima facie evidence, it is held that inasmuch as this rule is contrary to the general principle, the recital should be strictly construed and not extended beyond its necessary import.³

Fraudulent Conveyances. — In cases where conveyances are sought to be impeached as fraudulent as to creditors or purchasers, a like diversity of opinion exists concerning the weight to be attached to recitals in the purchasers' deeds, some courts holding the recitals to be no evidence of payment, and others holding them to be prima facie evidence of that fact.¹

VII. PROTECTION AND MODE OF RELIEF — 1. Rights Against Which Purchaser Is Protected. — Inasmuch as the doctrine of purchase for value and without notice is involved in a great many branches of the law, it is hardly practicable to enumerate in this title all the various claims and rights against which a bona fide purchaser will be protected in equity. Generally the statement that certain rights will or will not be enforced as against such a purchaser will be found in the various titles throughout this work where those specific rights are treated.² A few instances, however, may properly be mentioned in this discussion.

Equitable Rights in General. — When a purchaser of the legal title occupies the position of a purchaser for value and without notice, he will be protected as of course against all prior equitable rights and titles of third persons,³ especially where the equity sought to be asserted is secret or latent.⁴ Among the particular equitable rights against which the purchaser will be protected in equity are resulting trusts,⁵ contracts by the vendor to convey to third persons,⁶ parol agreements between prior grantors and grantees that deeds absolute in form shall be held as mortgages,⁷ and vendors' liens for unpaid

2. Affirmative Relief to Purchaser as Plaintiff. — The rule has long been settled in equity jurisprudence that the fact that a person is a purchaser for value and without notice, while it may be a perfect ground of defense, is not available as a ground for affirmative relief to the purchaser as a party plaintiff.² The instances, if any, in which affirmative relief may be granted to a bona fide purchaser are few and exceptional, and must rest either upon their own peculiar facts or upon fraud in the person against whom the relief is sought, or upon the provisions of some statute.³ But the rule that the purchaser cannot have affirmative relief does not, of course, embrace the relief sought by a mortgagee⁴ or an assignee of a mortgage⁵ in an action of foreclosure.

6. Purchase Scale. — One of the partners in a firm engaged in conducting a sawmill purchased certain logs on the account of the firm; the firm, however, was dissatisfied with the contract, and the partner who had made it agreed to buy the logs from the firm on his own account, the firm agreeing to saw them at so much per thousand "at purchase scale." The court held that the meaning of the term purchase scale should not have been left to the jury, saying: "There is no doubt as to the meaning of the term purchase scale. It clearly meant the scale made at the time of the purchase." Hayes v. Cummings, 99 Mich. 206.

7. Technically Pure. — In Matheson v. Campbell, 69 Fed. Rep. 608, it was said: "'Technically pure' means pure in the ordinary acceptance of the terms of the art. 'Chemically pure' means absolutely pure."

Pure Water. (See also the title WATERWORKS AND WATER COMPANIES.) — In Com. v. Towanda Water Works, (Pa. 1888) 15 Atl. 1. Purgatory.—In Harrison v. Brophy, 59 Kan. 3, it was said: “Purgatory is defined by an authoritative expositor of the church’s creed to be ‘a state of suffering after this life, in which those souls are for a time detained who depart this life after their deadly sins have been remitted as to the stain and guilt, and as to the everlasting pain that was due to them, but who have on account of those sins still some debt of temporal punishment to pay; as also those souls which leave this world guilty only of venial sins. In purgatory these souls are purified and rendered fit to enter into heaven, where nothing defiled enters.’ Catholic Belief (Lambert’s Am. ed.) 196. Devotees of this church ‘also believe that the souls in purgatory * * * are relieved by the sacrifice of the mass, by prayer, and pious works and almsdeeds.’” dollars would be paid to the bearer thereof. The court held that this was clearly a wrong description of the note. And see State v. Page, 19 Mo. 218.

Popular Sense.—In State v. Harris, 5 Ired. L. (27 N. Car.) 287, it was held that, in a statute making it indictable to pass a counterfeit banknote “purporting to be a bill or note issued by order of the president and directors of any bank,” the legislature did not use the word purporting in its strict technical sense, as meaning that these words should appear on the face of the counterfeit bill or note, but in its popular signification, to denote a bill or note presumed to have been issued by the order of the president and directors of the bank.

Purport Clause.—“In the ordinary form of the indictment [for forgery], we have seen, the recitation of the tenor of the instrument is preceded by its mention as purporting to be a bond, * * * or whatever else it appears on its face to be. This is termed the purport clause. Now, in reason, the purport of recited words is matter not of fact but of law—not for the jury, but for the court, and on familiar principles it need not be alleged. Therefore it is believed that the purport clause in the indictment for forgery is never necessary.” 2 Bishop on Criminal Procedure (3d ed.), §413, followed in Myers v. State, 101 Ind. 381. See also Sharley v. State, 54 Ind. 168; Harding v. State, 54 Ind. 359; State v. Gustin, 5 N. J. L. 857.

Purport and Tenor.—See TENOR.

3. Purport.—State v. Harris, 5 Ired. L. (27 N. Car.) 295.

“Purport means the design or tendency; meaning; import.” State v. Sherwood, 90 Iowa 553, quoted in State v. Burling, 102 Iowa 681.

Foreign Laws.—A Wisconsin statute provided that printed copies of the statute laws of any state or territory of the United States purporting to be published under the authority of their respective governments should be admitted as evidence of such laws. It was held that laws of another state which were compiled and printed by a private individual, but were authorized by a statute of that state which declared them to be competent evidence of the several acts and resolutions therein contained, purported to be published under the authority of that state. Hollister v. McCord, 111 Wis. 538. See also Falls v. U. S. Savings, etc., Co., 97 Ala. 417; Merrifield v. Robbins, 8 Gray (Mass.) 150; and see the title FOREIGN LAWS, vol. 13, p. 1050.

itself; design; intention.¹ Purposely means by purpose or design; intentionally; with premeditation.²

PURPRESTURE. (See also the titles ACCRETION, vol. 1, p. 472; WHARVES AND WHARFINGERS.)—A purpresture is an inclosure or appropriation by a private party of a part of that which belongs to and ought to be open and free to the enjoyment of the public at large.³

1. Purpose.—Webst. Dict., quoted in Loftin v. Watson, 32 Ark. 420; Homewood v. Wilmington, 5 Houst. (Del.) 127.

Purpose is a synonym for design, intention, aim. Anderson v. Hooks, 9 Ala. 709.

Intent.—In Phillips v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1898) 45 S. W. Rep. 709, the trial court instructed that "the offense of burglary in the nighttime is constituted by entering a house by force in the nighttime for the purpose of committing the crime of theft." It was objected to this instruction that the word purpose was used instead of the word "intent." The appellate court held that the objection was hypercritical.

Purpose of School—Purposes and Uses.—In Board of Education v. Fonda, 77 N. Y. 360, it was said: "A purpose is that which one sets before himself to strive for and reach. It is the end rather than the means thereto. So the purpose of a school, the end of setting it up, is strictly the mental training and finish of the scholars; and the schoolhouse is but a means to that end. But the word in the plural, purposes, is sometimes of the same sense as the word 'uses.'"

Charitable Purposes.—See the title CHARITIES AND TRUSTS FOR CHARITABLE USES, vol. 5, p. 893.

Consideration and Purpose Distinguished.—In holding that an acknowledgment of a mortgage which did not show that the mortgage was executed for the purpose therein expressed was sufficient, the court said: "In ordinary parlance the considerations which prompt an action may not be easily distinguished from the purposes sought to be effected. But with regard to legal instruments, and in the connection in which it is used in the statute, the word 'consideration' has a more limited and technical meaning, distinct from motives or purposes. It means something of value in the eye of the law; something in the way of price or compensation which may be of value to the obligor or of detriment to the obligee. Whereas purposes evidently means the effect which the instrument is intended to have upon the rights of the contracting parties and the status of the subject-matter. To illustrate in case of a mortgage. The loan is the consideration; but the purpose of the mortgage is to create a certain and definite security for the repayment, either by bill in equity or sale under a power." Ford v. Burks, 37 Ark. 94. And see the title CONSIDERATION, vol. 6, p. 672.

Other Purposes—Ejusdem Generis. (See also OTHER, vol. 21, p. 1011.)—In In re Barre Water Co., 62 Vt. 30, it was said: "The words 'other purposes' must be construed to refer to purposes ejusdem generis with the purposes specially mentioned, and to mean other like purposes, or other like public purposes."

Humane Purposes.—See HUMANE, vol. 15, p. 783.

Religious Purpose.—See RELIGIOUS PURPOSE.

Sanitary Purpose.—See SANITARY.

2. Purposely.—Whitman v. State, 17 Neb. 226, quoting Webst. Dict.

Murder. (See also the title MURDER AND MANSLAUGHTER, vol. 21, pp. 83, 157.)—The meaning of the word purposely may be fully expressed in an indictment by the use of the words "with intent," or "feloniously." Carder v. State, 17 Ind. 307.

Purposely killing is intentionally and wilfully killing. Lang v. State, 84 Ala. 5; Fahnestock v. State, 23 Ind. 262; State v. Del Bello, 8 Ohio Dec. 455; State v. Straub, 16 Wash. 121.

3. Purpresture.—See the title NUISANCES, vol. 21, p. 683. See also U. S. v. Debs, 64 Fed. Rep. 740; Chicago v. Ward, 169 Ill. 392; Grand Rapids v. Powers, 89 Mich. 112; Moyamensing Tp. v. Long, 1 Pars. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 145; State v. Goodnight, 70 Tex. 682; People v. Chicago, 193 Ill. 507; Quincy v. Jones, 76 Ill. 231; Delaware, etc., Canal Co. v. Lawrence, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 180. And see dissenting opinion of Magruder, J., in People v. Chicago, 193 Ill. 563.

In Revell v. People, 177 Ill. 480, it was said: "Purprestures—more properly pourprestures—is derived from the French pourprise, and according to Lord Coke signifies a close or inclosure; that is, when one encroaches and makes that safe to himself which ought to be common to many." See to the same effect State v. Kean, 69 N. H. 122, citing Co. Litt. 277b.

Examples.—In Revell v. People, 177 Ill. 468, 69 Am. St. Rep. 257, it was held that where a shore owner on Lake Michigan, without grant or other authority from the state, erected piers in the lake in front of his premises, the piers constituted a purpresture. See also People v. Vanderbilt, 28 N. Y. 396.

In Union Depot, etc., Co. v. Brunswick, 31 Minn. 302, it was held that if a riparian owner unlawfully intruded into a stream beyond the "point of navigability" and there filled up the bed of the stream so as to obstruct the public right of navigation, for the sole purpose of extending his possession, this would constitute a purpresture which the public would have a right to abate as a public nuisance.

In State v. Goodnight, 70 Tex. 682, it was held that the unlawful inclosure of school lands was both a purpresture and a public nuisance.

In Atty.-Gen. v. Ewart Booming Co., 34 Mich. 473, it was said: "An unauthorized inclosure of a part of a highway may also be a purpresture and a public wrong, whether the highway be one by land or by water."

PURSUANCE. — See note 1.

PURSUANT. — See note 2.

PURSUIT. — See note 3.

PUT. — I. A “put,” in the language of stockbrokers, is defined to be the “privilege of delivering or not delivering” the thing sold, and a “call” is defined to be the “privilege of calling for or not calling for” the thing bought.⁴
II. To put means to lay or place.⁵

Any unauthorized erection over a highway is a purpresture. State v. Kean, 69 N. H. 122; Knox v. New York, 55 Barb. (N. Y.) 404.

Purpresture and Nuisance Distinguished. — See the title NUISANCES, vol. 21, p. 683. And see U. S. v. Debs, 64 Fed. Rep. 740; Smith v. Rochester, 92 N. Y. 483; Moyamensing Tp. v. Long, 1 Pars. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 145. Compare Delaware, etc., Canal Co. v. Lawrence, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 163.

1. In Pursuance. — “A thing is to be considered as done ‘in pursuance’ of the act’ when the person who does it is acting honestly and bona fide, either under the powers which the act gives or in discharge of the duties which it imposes.” Smith v. Shaw, 10 B. & C. 284, 21 E. C. L. 78. See to the same effect Thomas v. Stephenson, 2 El. & Bl. 108, 75 E. C. L. 108.

So it has been held that if any public or private body or person charged with the execution of an act honestly intends to put the law in motion, and really and not unreasonably believes in the existence of facts which, if existent, would justify his acting, and acts accordingly, his conduct will be “in pursuance” or “under or by virtue” of the statute under which he believes he is acting, although he errs in such belief. The question whether there was in fact reasonable ground for such belief is a subordinate question, though one very material to be pressed on the minds of the jury. But the presence or absence of such reasonable ground can only be relied on for the purpose of determining whether the belief was bona fide or not. Hermann v. Seneschal, 13 C. B. N. S. 392, 106 E. C. L. 392. See also Booth v. Clive, 10 C. B. 827, 70 E. C. L. 827; Read v. Coker, 13 C. B. 863, 76 E. C. L. 863; Horn v. Thornborough, 3 Exch. 846; Cann v. Clipperton, 10 Ad. & El. 582, 37 E. C. L. 178, 2 Per. & Dav. 560; Rudd v. Scott, 2 Scott N. R. 631; Roberts v. Orchard, 2 H. & C. 769; Selmes v. Judge, L. R. 6 Q. B. 724; Chamberlain v. King, L. R. 6 C. P. 474; Midland R. Co. v. Witherington, Dist., 11 Q. B. D. 788; Lea v. Facey, 19 Q. B. D. 352; Cox v. Reid, 13 Q. B. 558, 66 E. C. L. 558; Hughes v. Buckland, 15 M. & W. 346; Rochfort v. Rynd, 9 L. R. Ir. 204; O’Dea v. Hickman, 18 L. R. Ir. 233.

The phrase “in execution and pursuance of” in an indictment for conspiracy has been held to mean “to effect the object of.” U. S. v. Nunnemacher, 7 Biss. (U. S.) 137; U. S. v. Boyden, 1 Lowell (U. S.) 268.

2. Pursuant. — The affiant in an affidavit for an attachment stated a debt to exist, but in a subsequent part of the affidavit he stated the debt to be pursuant to a judgment. The court said: “This will not do. The word pursuant has several meanings, some of which, in the connection the word is here used, would qualify the positive declaration before made into a mere assertion that, according to the judgment, so much was due. This was not enough. Wright v. Cogswell, 1 McLean (U. S.) 471; Bickerdike v. Bollman, 1 T. R. 406. ‘According to,’ ‘as appears from,’ ‘by the terms of,’ ‘pursuant to,’ or other equivalent terms referring to the judgment may be all true, and yet, in point of fact, nothing be due upon it.” Quarles v. Robinson, 2 Pin. (Wis.) 99. And see ACCORDING, vol. 1, p. 430.

Pursuant to Law. — See LAW, vol. 18, p. 572.

3. Pursuit. — By the general corporation law of Oregon, the formation of corporations is authorized “for the purpose of engaging in any lawful enterprise, business, pursuit, or occupation,” and it has been held that the words “business” and pursuit, as thus used, are not restricted to schemes for making money. The court said: “The words ‘business’ and pursuit are used with reference to any object consistent with the interests of society that may engage the attention of men and invite their co-operation.” Maxwell v. Akin, 89 Fed. Rep. 180.

4. Put. (See also the titles GAMBLING CONTRACTS, vol. 14, p. 576; OPTIONS, vol. 21, p. 924.) — Minnesota Lumber Co. v. Whitebreast Coal Co., 160 Ill. 97. See also Maurer v. King, 127 Cal. 114; Webster v. Sturges, 7 Ill. App. 563; Bigelow v. Benedict, 70 N. Y. 202. And see CALL, vol. 5, p. 107.

5. Put. — A lien was created upon all the goods, implements, stock, fixtures, tools, and other personal property which might be put on certain premises. In construing this lien, the court said: “The farm produce may also be properly said to be put upon the premises. The word put, in a general sense, means simply to ‘lay or place.’ When the crops were planted they were put upon the premises. This is also true of the hay, although while in the form of growing grass it was part of the realty.” McCaffrey v. Woodin, 65 N. Y. 469.

Put in Repair. — In Wayzata v. Great Northern R. Co., 50 Minn. 438, it was held that where the charter of a railroad company gave to it a right to construct its railroad upon and along a highway, road, street, etc., if necessary, but required the company to “put such highway, etc., in such condition and state of repair as not to impair or interfere with its free and proper use,” the requirement was a continuing one, so that the company might at all times be required to keep the highway in the specified condition and state of repair, so far as consistent with the presence of the railroad upon it.

Put into His Hands. — The declaration alleged that a writ was put into the hands of the constable for service. The court said: “And we think, under this declaration, that proof that the writ was offered to him, and made subject to his control, and his attention called to the duty required of him, is proof that it was ‘put into his hands.’ A sheriff may be without hands, or otherwise disabled from the manual taking of a writ, and the process may be, from the necessity of the case, put into his hat or pocket, and in such case it is ‘put into his hands’ and possession.” Patten v. Sowles, 51 Vt. 391.

Put Away. — In Rex v. Palmer, 2 Leach C. C. 978, R. & R. C. C. 72, 1 B. & P. N. R. 96, it was held that if a person knowingly delivered a forged banknote to another person, for the purpose of its being knowingly uttered by such other person, who uttered it accordingly, the deliverer of such note might be convicted of having “disposed of and put away” the note.

In Rex v. Giles, 1 Moody 166, it was held that giving a forged note to an innocent agent or accomplice that he might pass it was a disposing of it and putting it away.

1. Putative Father. — See State v. Nestaval, 72 Minn. 415; and see the title BASTARDY, vol. 3, p. 871.

Putative Matrimony. (See also the title MARRIAGE, vol. 19, p. 1156.) — In Smith v. Smith, 1 Tex. 628, it was said: “Putative matrimony is defined to be a marriage which, being null on account of some dissolving impediment, is held, notwithstanding, for a true marriage, because of its having been contracted in good faith, by both or one of the spouses being ignorant of the impediment. Good faith is always presumed, and he who would impede its effects must prove that it did not exist. To make the good faith perfect, it is necessary that the marriage should have been celebrated with the prescribed solemnities — that the spouses may have been ignorant of the annulling vice, and that their ignorance be excusable. Even after such marriage is annulled, it produces the civil effect of true matrimony, as well with respect to the spouses as with respect to the offspring.”

2. Putting Character in Issue. (See also the title CHARACTER (IN EVIDENCE), vol. 5, p. 850.) — In Porter v. Seiler, 23 Pa. St. 430, it was said: “Putting character in issue is a technical expression which does not mean simply that the character may be affected by the result, but that it is of particular importance in the suit itself; as the character of the plaintiff in an action of slander, or that of a woman in an action on the case for seduction.” See also Dudley v. McCluer, 65 Mo. 243; Stark v. Publishers, George Knapp, etc., 160 Mo. 529.

3. Quack Medicine. — In Kohler Mfg. Co. v. Beeshore, (C. C. A.) 59 Fed. Rep. 574, it was said: “It has been more than once held in this circuit that courts of equity will not intervene by injunction in disputes between the owners of quack medicines, meaning thereby remedies or specifics whose composition is kept secret, and which are sold to be used by the purchasers without the advice of regular or licensed physicians. Fowle v. Spear, 4 Pa. L. J. Rep. 145, 7 Pa. L. J. 176; Heath v. Wright, 3 Wall. Jr. (C. C.) 141. A similar view has prevailed in several state courts. Wolfe v. Burke, 56 N. Y. 115; Smith v. Woodruff, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 438; Laird v. Wilder, 9 Bush (Ky.) 132.”

4. Quadroon. (See also MULATTO, vol. 20, p. 1079.) — State v. Davis, 2 Bailey L. (S. Car.) 559, where it was said that the term had not been adopted in South Carolina, and that a quadroon would in that state be called a mulatto or a person of color. See also Thurman v. State, 18 Ala. 280.

5. Qualification. — Hyde v. State, 52 Miss. 672. See also Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 319.

“Qualification for office * * * is endowment or accomplishment that fits for an office; having the legal requisites; endowed with qualities fit or suitable for the purpose.” Com. v. Hanley, 9 Pa. St. 517, quoted in State v. Seay, 64 Mo. 101, 27 Am. Rep. 206.

Absence of Disqualifications. — “The word qualification * * * implies not only the presence of every requisite which the constitution demands, but also the absence of every disqualification which it imposes.” Hall v. Hostetter, 17 B. Mon. (Ky.) 786, quoted in Com. v. Jones, 10 Bush (Ky.) 744.

Disqualification. — A statute relating to elections provided that so much thereof as related to the qualification of electors and candidates should take effect on a certain date. It was held that the word qualification, as thus used, did not include disqualification. Reg. v. Manning, 4 Ont. Pr. 73.

Grand Juror. — In Byrne v. State, 12 Wis. 519, it was held that the words “any person not having all the qualifications of an elector,” in a statute prescribing the qualifications of grand jurors, meant any person disqualified, incapacitated, or disentitled to vote from any of the causes fixed by law, and referred to the condition of the person at the time when his vote was received.

Juror — Bias. — Act Cong. July 20, 1840, prescribed that jurors in the federal courts must have the same qualifications as jurors in the state courts. It was held that the word qualifications, as here used, referred to general qualifications, as age, citizenship, etc., and not to personal objections, such as bias, interest, and the like, which disqualify only at the instance of a party. U. S. v. Williams, 1 Dill. (U. S.) 485. See also the title JURY AND JURY TRIAL, vol. 17, p. 1086.

While the word "qualification" in one sense means fitness for, in another sense it is the doing of some act as a condition of taking or holding office.¹

QUALIFIED ACCEPTANCE.—See the title BILLS OF EXCHANGE AND PROMISSORY NOTES, vol. 4, pp. 208, 219, 224, 375.

QUALIFIED ELECTOR — VOTER. (See also the title ELECTIONS, vol. 10, p. 589 et seq.; and see ELECTOR, vol. 10, p. 860; MAJORITY, vol. 19, p. 613; VOTER.)—Without any accompanying explanation or limitation, the term "qualified elector" or "qualified voter" means one who is qualified to vote at an election for public officers.²

Qualified Teacher — Certificate. (See also the title SCHOOLS.)—In Goetz v. School-Dist. No. 59, 31 Minn. 164, it was held that an allegation in a complaint that the plaintiff was "a duly qualified teacher of and in the public schools of said state" included the fact that he had received the certificate required by the statute, "for without that fact he could not be a duly qualified teacher."

But in Jackson School Tp. v. Farlow, 75 Ind. 118, it was held, in an action by a teacher upon a contract entered into by him with a township trustee, that the complaint must allege that he had obtained the requisite license, and that an averment that he was "prepared and qualified in every particular to perform all the conditions of the contract" was not equivalent to such an allegation.

1. Condition Precedent to Holding Office.—People v. Palen, 74 Hun (N. Y.) 292; People v. Crissey, 91 N. Y. 616; Vaughan v. Johnson, 77 Va. 300.

Statutory Definition.—"The word qualified, when applied to any person elected or appointed to office, shall mean the performance by such person of those things which are required by law to be performed by him previous to his entering upon the duties of his office." Stat. Wis. (1898), § 4971, subdiv. 15; State v. Knight, 82 Wis. 160.

Qualified in Sense of Sworn In.—See Ross v. Williamson, 44 Ga. 503.

Sworn and Qualified.—In Paca v. Dutton, 4 Mo. 373, it was said: "Another objection taken to the final certificate of the clerk is that it says the judge was 'duly commissioned and sworn,' and the Act of Congress says the certificate shall say 'duly commissioned and qualified.' It is best to pursue the very words of the act. We are not entirely certain that Congress meant by the word qualified no more than that which is comprehended by the word 'sworn.'"

Oath.—"To qualify for an office means to take an oath of office." People v. McKinney, 52 N. Y. 380. See to the same effect People v. Palen, 74 Hun (N. Y.) 292. And see Hale v. Salter, 25 La. Ann. 324; Archer v. State, 74 Md. 447; Ex p. Smith, 8 S. Car. 519. See also infra, this note, Holding Office until Successor Qualifies.

Same — Holding Office until Successor Qualifies. (See also supra, this note, Oath, and see the title PUBLIC OFFICERS, post.)—Where a statute provided for the appointment of clerks pro tempore to fill vacancies, and authorized them to hold office until their successors should be elected and qualified, it was held that the word qualified meant "nothing more than that the person elected has complied with the requisitions of the statute by giving bond and taking the oath of office." State v. Neibling, 6 Ohio St. 44. See to the same effect State v. Albert, 55 Kan. 159.

In State v. Boyd, 31 Neb. 732, it was said: "By 'failure to qualify' is meant failure to give the bond and take the oath of office required by the constitution."

And in State v. Bemenderfer, 96 Ind. 376, the court said: "The term qualified, as used in the statute, does not mean possessed of the necessary political, mental, and moral endowments, but means the acts performed after election, as taking an official oath and executing an official bond." See also Searcy v. Grow, 15 Cal. 117; Steinback v. State, 38 Ind. 483; People v. Palen, 74 Hun (N. Y.) 293.

But in Com. v. Hanley, 9 Pa. St. 517, it was said: "Being duly qualified in the constitutional sense, and in the ordinary acceptance of the words, unquestionably means that he, the successor, shall possess every qualification; that he shall, in all respects, comply with every requisite before entering on the duties of the office; that, in addition to being elected by the qualified electors, he shall be commissioned by the governor, give bond as required by law, and that he shall be bound by oath or affirmation (vide 8th article of constitution) to support the constitution of the commonwealth and to perform the duties of the office with fidelity."

Test Oath.—The Constitution of New York provides (art. 13, § 1), that no other oath, declaration, or test than the oath therein prescribed shall be required as a qualification for any office of public trust. A statute provided that every excise commissioner must make and file an oath that he was not interested in the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors. It was held that the statute was unconstitutional. The court said that the word qualification was "used in the constitution in the sense of something to be done before taking office, as a condition of holding it; in the sense of taking an oath of office, not in the sense of fitness." People v. Palen, 74 Hun (N. Y.) 293.

Qualify in Sense of Probate.—The word qualify has been held to be equivalent to "probate" where used in a statute authorizing probate judges "to qualify wills by receiving the evidence of the witnesses," etc. Bent v. Thompson, 5 N. Mex. 408.

2. Qualified Elector or Voter.—Eagle County v. People, 26 Colo. 297; Beardstown v. Virginia, 76 Ill. 34; State v. Williams, 5 Wis. 308; State v. Tuttle, 53 Wis. 45.

QUALIFIED FEE—QUALIFIED PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATION.

Registration Necessary. — By the term "qualified voter" is implied not simply that a person is eligible to be a voter, but also that he is registered as such in the way and manner prescribed by law.¹

QUALIFIED FEE. — A limited or qualified fee simple is such as has some collateral matter annexed to it whereby it is made by some means determinable, viz., by limitation or condition.²

QUALIFIED INDORSER. — See the title BILLS OF EXCHANGE AND PROMISSORY NOTES, vol. 4, p. 275.

QUALIFIED PILOT. — See the title PILOTS, vol. 22, p. 814.

QUALIFIED PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATION. — See the title LIBEL AND SLANDER, vol. 18, p. 1029.

"A qualified voter is one who by law, at an election, is entitled to vote." State v. Brassfield, 67 Mo. 337. Standing alone, the term qualified electors means "persons who are legally qualified to vote." State v. Crook, 126 Ala. 600, quoting Bouv. L. Dict.

In Com. v. Hanley, 9 Pa. St. 518, it was said that the term qualified electors means "citizens, either native or naturalized, who have paid taxes and who are in all other respects entitled to vote."

Tally Sheet of Last General Election. — In Bell v. Americus, 79 Ga. 152, it was held, under a constitutional provision prohibiting any municipal corporation from incurring indebtedness without the consent of two-thirds of the qualified voters thereof at an election held for the purpose, that the legislature could prescribe the rule by which to ascertain whether two-thirds of the legally qualified voters voted at such election, and that an act providing that in determining the question the tally sheet of the last general election held in such municipality should be taken as a correct enumeration of the qualified voters thereof was constitutional.

The term qualified voters, as used in the Constitution of Mississippi in existence in 1883, art. 12, § 14, which required the assent of two-thirds of the qualified voters of a county to an issue of municipal bonds, was held in Carroll County v. Smith, 111 U. S. 556, to mean those qualified and actually voting, and not those qualified and entitled to vote. See also Cronly v. Tucson, (Ariz. 1899) 56 Pac. Rep. 877.

Elected and Qualified. — In State v. Andrews, (Kan. 1902) 67 Pac. Rep. 877, it was said: "The authorities are substantially agreed that there is a broad distinction between the meaning of the words 'elected and qualified' and that of 'qualified' alone, and the distinction is based upon the consideration that the word 'elected' has a well-defined and universally recognized meaning, and that when used it may not be assumed that the constitution framers intended it should have no significance, and might therefore be ignored."

Citizens and Qualified Electors Distinguished — Women. — In State v. Ah Chew, 16 Nev. 59, it was said: "Women are citizens, but they are not, under the constitution and laws of this state, qualified electors. They have no right to vote or hold any office."

The Constitution of Colorado makes ineligible to hold any county office every person who is not a qualified elector. It was held that the term qualified elector was here used in its broadest sense, meaning a person qualified to vote generally, and did not include women. Matter of House Bill 166, 9 Colo. 628.

County-seat. (See also the title COUNTY-SEAT, vol. 7, pp. 1026, 1033.) — A statute provided that the question of the removal of a county-seat might be submitted to the voters whenever one-third of the qualified voters of the county petitioned therefor. In construing this statute the court said: "As the statute provides that all persons returned on the assessor's list as liable to pay a poll tax shall be counted as qualified voters, in ascertaining the total number of such voters in the county, we think that the right to petition for the removal of a county-seat is not confined to those only that have paid a poll tax, but extends to all citizens of the county who would have the right to vote upon the payment of a poll tax. In order to carry out the evident purpose of the legislature, the phrase qualified voters used in the act must be given this meaning in determining the qualification of petitioners, and not be restricted to such only as have paid their poll tax." Dunn v. Lott, 67 Ark. 593.

In Wilson v. Bartlett, (Idaho 1900) 62 Pac. Rep. 416, it was held that a qualified elector to sign a petition for the removal of a county-seat was one who possessed all the qualifications enumerated in the constitution.

Place of Voting. — In Soldiers' Voting Bill, 45 N. H. 602, it was said: "If the provisions of the state constitution make it a qualification of the voter for senators, within the meaning of the word 'qualifications' as used in the Constitution of the United States, that the vote should be cast in the place where the voter resides, then the legislature have not constitutional power to authorize votes for representatives to be given in other places than those where the voters dwell. * * * Now it would be an artificial and forced construction to hold that, in speaking generally of the qualifications of a voter, it would be intended to include as a qualification the place where by law he was required to give his vote."

QUALITY. (See also the titles FRAUD AND DECEIT, vol. 14, p. 12; IMPLIED WARRANTIES, vol. 15, p. 1210; SALES; WARRANTY.)—Quality is defined as the condition of being of such a sort as distinguished from others; special or temporary character; profession, occupation.²

QUANDO ACCIDERINT.—When they shall come in; when they shall come to hand. A judgment against an executor or administrator directed to be satisfied out of the assets when they shall afterwards come to his hands is termed a judgment quando acciderint. Such a judgment is proper if the defendant has pleaded plene administravit, and it admits that the defendant has fully administered up to that time.³

QUANTI MINORIS.—An action of the civil law, adopted in Louisiana, to obtain a reduction in the price of a thing sold in consequence of a defect found in the article after the sale. The action must be begun within twelve months from the date of the sale, or at least from the time within which the defect became known to the purchaser, and it lies equally in cases where the seller knew of the defects of the thing sold as in those wherein he was ignorant of them and was acting in good faith.⁴

1. Qualified Title.—In Illinois Steel Co. v. Bilot, 109 Wis. 426, with regard to the rule that riparian owners have a qualified title to submerged lands in a navigable river, the court said: "We should say in passing that the term qualified title, as above used, refers to that interest in the beds of navigable streams which has passed to private ownership according to the uniform holdings of this court—a full title, subject to the public rights which were incident to the lands forming such beds at the time of the creation of the trust above mentioned." See also the title RIPARIAN RIGHTS.

2. Quality.—Webst. Dict., quoted in State v. Martin, 60 Ark. 353.

Kind and Quality Used Synonymously.—See U. S. v. One Hundred and Thirty-Two Packages Spirituous Liquors, 65 Fed. Rep. 982. Compare Francis v. Maas, 3 Q. B. D. 343.

Grade and Quality.—See Whitehall Mfg. Co. v. Wise, 119 Pa. St. 494.

Trademark.—In Dennison Mfg. Co. v. Thomas Mfg. Co., 94 Fed. Rep. 657, it was said: "The word quality is used in different senses in the cases. It is employed in some to denote the grade, ingredients, or properties of an article, and in others to indicate generally the merit or excellence of an article as associated with or coming from a certain source. While there can be no valid trademark as denoting quality when used merely in the former sense, there may be a valid trademark as indicating quality when used in the latter sense." See also the title TRADEMARKS.

Quality of Testimony—Instructions.—In Gilmore v. Seattle, etc., R. Co., (Wash. 1902) 69 Pac. Rep. 744, the trial court instructed the jury that it should consider the quality of the testimony rather than the number of witnesses. This was held to be error, the court saying: "If by the use of the term quality the court meant the better evidence, then the court has invaded the province of the jury, for it is for the jury to say whether they will regard the testimony of the greater number of witnesses testifying as more or less controlling than the better testimony of the fewer number." See also Morton v. O'Connor, 85 Ill. App. 273.

Land—Taxation. (See also the title TAXATION.)—By an English statute lands were to be rated for taxation according to their quantity and quality. In construing this statute Lush, J., said: "The word quality cannot mean 'producing quality,' but the obvious intention is that the value shall be estimated with reference to that of land of a similar description not built upon, though it may be enhanced in value by the proximity of buildings." Regent's Canal Co. v. St. Pancras, 3 Q. B. D. 79.

Same—Cultivation.—Upon the meaning of quality of land, as the term is used in the rule that upon the partial failure of consideration in the quality of the land sold the vendee may recover damages, the court said: "To confine the term quality, in this connection, to natural qualities, such as fertility of soil and the like, would be a narrow construction. It must be understood in a more comprehensive sense, as embracing not only qualities essentially inherent in the land itself, but also adventitious qualities—qualities extrinsically added, such as preparation for cultivation or any other material improvement made upon the land." Barnes v. Anderson, 21 Ark. 126. See also the title VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

Same—Location and Circumstances.—A statute provided that in proceedings to assess damages for land taken under the right of eminent domain, the quality of the land must be described. It was held that the description of quality must have reference to the location and circumstances. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Bruner, 55 Pa. St. 320. QUANTUM. — Quantum means quantity, amount.²

QUANTUM DAMNIFICATUS. — An issue directed by a court of equity to be tried in a court of law, to ascertain by a jury the amount of damages suffered by the nonperformance of some collateral undertaking to secure which a penalty has been given. When such damages have thus been ascertained the court will grant relief upon their payment.³

QUANTUM MERUIT. — In pleading, as much as he has deserved. Where a person employs another to do work for him, without any agreement as to compensation, the law implies a promise to pay for the services as much as they may deserve or merit. In such case the plaintiff may suggest in his declaration that the defendant promised to pay him as much as he reasonably deserved, and then aver that his trouble was worth such a sum of money, which the defendant has omitted to pay. This is called an assumpsit on a quantum meruit.⁴

QUANTUM VALEBAT. — The name of the common count for goods sold and delivered.

1. Quantity — Boundaries. — In Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Bruner, 55 Pa. St. 318, it was held that in a proceeding to assess damages for land taken by a railroad company, a report setting out the adjoiners and boundaries, with a draft showing the length, breadth, courses, and distances of the ground taken, without a calculation of the contents, sufficiently set forth the quantity of land taken. See generally the title EMINENT DOMAIN, 7 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 597.

Quantity Guaranteed. — The defendant, a common carrier, signed a bill of lading acknowledging receipt of a specified quantity of wheat and containing the words "quantity guaranteed." It was held that the words "quantity guaranteed" might be regarded as a technical expression, known to and understood by persons in the business, and evidence by such a person was proper to explain it. Bissel v. Campbell, 54 N. Y. 353.

Divers and Sundry. — In Com. v. O'Connell, 12 Allen (Mass.) 453, which was a prosecution for larceny, it was said: "It is not perceived * * * that the description of bank bills as 'a quantity,' instead of 'divers and sundry,' constitutes an error." I. DEFINITION. — The term “quarantine” was originally used to denote the forty days during which a ship arriving in port and known or suspected to be infected with a malignant or contagious disease was not allowed to land its passengers, freight, or crew, for fear of communicating such disease. In modern usage, it applies to a space of time, varying according to the exigencies of the case, during which certain persons are required to forbear all intercourse with others in order to prevent the spread of some disease with which they are supposed to be infected.¹

II. WHO MAY MAKE REGULATIONS. — A state may, in the exercise of its police power, pass quarantine and health laws with penalties for their violation, although they affect commerce in transit, and such statutes have been held constitutional in a large number of cases.² The statutes of the United Prohibition Against Entering Harbor. — In Gibson v. The Steamer Madras, 5 Hawaii 120, it was held, under the circumstances, that a steamer with smallpox on board was not in quarantine during the time she was outside the harbor, pending a controversy with the board of health, and under a prohibition from it to enter the harbor.

Purchase of Vaccine Matter. — In Daniel v. Putnam County, 113 Ga. 570, it is said: “In view of * * * the history of our legislation in reference to the prevention of smallpox, it seems very evident that the word ‘quarantine,’ as used in the paragraph of the constitution which provides for what purposes counties may levy taxes, was not intended to have any more than its usual and legitimate meaning; and that it cannot be held that a purchaser of vaccine matter, to be used to prevent the spread of smallpox in a county, was made for quarantine purposes, within the meaning of the word ‘quarantine’ as used in the constitution.” And see the title POLICE POWER, vol. 22, p. 923.

Vaccination. — See the titles SCHOOLS; VACCINATION.

States have enjoined the observance of state quarantine and health statutes and regulations on customs, revenue, and other officers of the United States.¹

Municipal Authorities. — It has been held that a municipal corporation has no power to establish and enforce quarantine regulations, where such power has not been expressly granted it, and cannot be necessarily or fairly implied as incident to the powers expressly granted.² Municipal corporations, however, are usually authorized to establish a quarantine by their charters or by general law.³

Delegation of Power. — In Metcalf v. St. Louis, 11 Mo. 102, it was held that a statute authorizing a city to make quarantine regulations was not unconstitutional as a delegation of power.

In Hurst v. Warner, 102 Mich. 238, 47 Am. St. Rep. 525, it was held that a statute providing that the state board of health might make rules for the inspection of the baggage of persons coming from a country where contagious diseases exist, was not a delegation of legislative power.

But in Ex p. Cox, 63 Cal. 21, it was held that the California Act of the 4th of March, 1881, relating to the Board of State Viticultural Commissioners, and providing that the officer therein mentioned should have power, subject to the approval of the board, to make and enforce rules and regulations in the nature of a quarantine for certain purposes, in so far as it declared that a wilful violation of the quarantine regulations of the board should be a misdemeanor, amounted to a delegation of legislative power, and was unconstitutional.

Board of Health. (See also the title BOARDS OF HEALTH, vol. 4, p. 596.) — A statute authorizing the establishment of a quarantine by a board of health was held not itself to establish the quarantine without action on the part of the board of health. Ex p. O'Donovan, 24 Fla. 281.

Same — Omission to Create. — In Rae v. Flint, 51 Mich. 526, it was held that the obligation and the power of the city council to act as a board of health to prevent the spread of contagion were not lessened by its omission to create a separate board of health.

4. Extent of Authority. — In Sumner v. Philadelphia, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 408, 30 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 320, it was held that a board of health had not an unlimited, arbitrary right to detain a vessel after there was no longer an appearance of malignant disease upon it.

Unreasonable Order of State Board of Health. — In Wilson v. Alabama G. S. R. Co., 77 Miss. 714, 78 Am. St. Rep. 543, it was held that an order of the state board of health prohibiting all persons from getting off trains or boats at any point in the state was unreasonable and void. See also Kosciusko v. Slomberg, 68 Miss. 469, 24 Am. St. Rep. 281.

Existence of Pestilential Disease. — In Eddy v. Board of Health, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 94, 30 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 392, it was held that the power of the

IV. CHARGES FOR QUARANTINE SERVICES. — Reasonable charges for quarantine services may be imposed upon a vessel under state authority,¹ and it has been held that the prohibition of the imposition of tonnage taxes by a state board of health of Philadelphia did not extend to the removal of tenants from their houses, and closing up the latter, unless justified by the existence of a pestilential disease, and such an action would be restrained by injunction.

Noninfected Persons. — The quarantine authorities may detain immigrants from noninfected countries, who have mingled with other passengers who could communicate pestilence or disease to which they themselves have been exposed or subjected. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Milner, 57 Fed. Rep. 276.

Dead Bodies. — In Lake Erie, etc., R. Co. v. James, 10 Ind. App. 550, it was held that a regulation of the state board of health providing that every dead body must be accompanied by a person in charge, who must present a transit permit from the proper health authority, giving permission for the removal, and showing the name and age of the deceased, the place and cause of death, the point to which the body is to be shipped, and the names of the medical attendant and undertaker, was a reasonable regulation.

Disinfection of Baggage. — Where a statute authorized state boards of health to establish regulations for the disinfection of the baggage of passengers coming from a country where a contagious disease existed, it was held that the board had no power to subject to disinfection the baggage of all immigrants whether or not such immigrants came from a port or locality where any dangerous, communicable disease existed. Hurst v. Warner, 102 Mich. 238, 47 Am. St. Rep. 525.

Disinfection of Rags. — In Train v. Boston Disinfecting Co., 144 Mass. 523, 59 Am. Rep. 113, it was held that a regulation of the board of health providing for the disinfection of rags brought into the port was valid.

And for a regulation as to the importation of rags, see Lockwood v. Bartlett, 130 N. Y. 340.

Second-hand Clothing. — An ordinance forbidding second-hand clothing to be brought into or sold in a town has been held unreasonable and void. Kosciusko v. Slomberg, 68 Miss. 469, 24 Am. St. Rep. 281. To the same effect see Greensboro v. Ehrenreich, 80 Ala. 579, 60 Am. Rep. 130. See also Weil v. Record, 24 N. J. Eq. 169.

Express Business. — In Matter of Smith, 146 N. Y. 68, it was held that the mere fact that a person carried on an express business in a district in which there were many cases of small-pox would not justify his detention in quarantine until he consented to be vaccinated.

Deviation. — In Forbes v. Board of Health, 28 Fla. 26, it was held that under the Florida acts a county board of health had no authority without an examination or inspection to require vessels, upon entering a port within the jurisdiction of said board, to deviate from their course six miles and to go to a quarantine station for inspection and examination.

Requirement of Display of Flags until Vessel Visited by Quarantine Officer — Indictment. — Bloom v. State, 57 Miss. 752.

Rockland, 45 Me. 496, it was held that where a vessel was subject to quarantine regulations, the officers of a town were not authorized to appropriate any part thereof for a hospital and to exclude the owner from the possession or control of any part of the vessel.

Health Officer at Port of New York. — In Young v. Flower, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 3 Misc. (N. Y.) 34, it was held that in cases of necessity and in the presence of immediate danger the health officer of the port of New York might temporarily bring persons suspected with being infected with contagious diseases into any county of the state, notwithstanding the protest of the local health board.

Quarantine Commissioner. — As to the qualifications of a quarantine commissioner, see People v. Platt, 117 N. Y. 159.

But in Forbes v. Board of Health, 28 Fla. 26, it was held that under the Florida acts a county board of health had no authority to demand and collect from vessels coming into the jurisdiction of said board, fees for fumigation or disinfection, unless said vessels were subject to and had been put in quarantine.

Seamen. — In Provincetown v. Smith, 120 Mass. 96, it was held that the owner of a vessel under quarantine regulations was not liable for the expenses of a seaman at a hospital to which he had been transferred by order of the board of health of a town.

Same — Lien. — In Platt v. The Georgia, 34 Fed. Rep. 79, it was held that the services of quarantine commissioners in the care of sick seamen were maritime in their nature, and does not forbid a charge for services under a quarantine act.¹ Expenses incurred under municipal regulations are to be borne by the municipal authorities where the patients or persons liable for their support are unable to pay them.²

V. LIABILITY FOR DAMAGES GROWING OUT OF ENFORCEMENT OF QUARANTINE REGULATIONS. — There can be no recovery from the municipal or state authorities of compensation for losses occasioned by the quarantining and disinfecting of premises infected with a contagious disease, where the only use made of the premises was such as was necessary for the proper care of the patients who were found suffering from the disease.³ Nor can a municipal corporation be held liable for an act of its health officer in wrongfully confining to quarantine a citizen supposed to be afflicted with a contagious disease, since in this respect the municipality is exercising a governmental duty.⁴ But though the municipality is not liable, the officer is if his acts are wrongful or unlawful.⁵

that a lien arising therefrom upon a vessel should be enforced by proceedings in admiralty.

Carrier. — In Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Milner, 57 Fed. Rep. 276, it was held that the costs and charges which are incurred in quarantine inspection may lawfully be imposed on a carrier who brings suspected passengers within the state.

Owner of Vessel. — But in New Orleans v. Windermere, 12 La. Ann. 84, it was held that if during the voyage a contagious disease breaks out on the vessel, and on her arrival at port the city authorities find it necessary, in order to prevent the spreading of the infection, to have the sick passengers sent to a hospital to be treated, the owners of the vessel cannot be made liable for the expenses incurred thereby.

1. Tonnage Taxes. — Peete v. Morgan, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 581; Morgan's Louisiana, etc., R., etc., Co. v. Board of Health, 36 La. Ann. 666, 118 U. S. 455. And see the cases cited in the preceding note.

But in Ferrari v. Board of Health, 24 Fla. 391, it was held that quarantine charges could not be based on the tonnage of a vessel, as such charges would be tonnage taxes in violation of the Constitution of the United States. See also Peete v. Morgan, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 581; Passenger Cases, 7 How. (U. S.) 283.

2. Liability of Municipality. — People v. Maccomb County, 3 Mich. 475. See also Matter of Taxpayers, 157 N. Y. 78, reversing 27 N. Y. App. Div. 353.

In Elliott v. Kalkaska Supervisors, 58 Mich. 452, 55 Am. Rep. 706, it was held that the authority of a township board of health to guard against smallpox extended to making contracts for the nursing of patients and for destruction of infected clothing. See also Rae v. Flint, 51 Mich. 526.

Municipality Not Primarily Liable for the Expenses Incident to Quarantine. — But the patient, or the person liable for his support, is primarily liable for the expenses of quarantine. Kollock v. Stevens Point, 37 Wis. 348.

Disinfecting Property — Owner May Be Charged with the Expense. — Train v. Boston Disinfecting Co., 144 Mass. 523, 59 Am. Rep. 113. See also Lockwood v. Bartlett, 130 N. Y. 340.

Expenses of Burial. — In McNorton v. Val Verde County, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 25 S. W. Rep. 654, it was held that a county was not liable for the burial expenses of a pauper who died in a pesthouse, which was in charge of the state under the quarantine laws.

3. Damages. — Webb v. Board of Health, 116 Mich. 516, 72 Am. St. Rep. 541.

Mandamus to Board of Supervisors Refused. — Farnsworth v. Kalkaska County, 56 Mich. 640.

Cases Allowing Compensation. — But in Safford v. Board of Health, 110 Mich. 81, 64 Am. St. Rep. 332, it was held that under the Michigan Act No. 403, Local Acts of 1893, prescribing the powers and duties of the board of health of the city of Detroit in cases of pestilence or epidemics, it was the duty of the board to award compensation for damages directly arising from its action in using a hotel for a hospital during an epidemic of smallpox among the inmates, and in causing the destruction of infected property.

And in Boom v. Utica, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 104, it was held that a municipal corporation had no power to order the forcible seizure of a person's house and its occupation as a pesthouse, without his consent and against his will, and for such an act would be liable in damages.

Duty to Provide Food. — Zellner v. Allentown, 5 Pa. Dist. 547, 18 Pa. Co. Ct. 162.

4. Wrongful Confinement — Liability of Municipality. — Mitchell v. Rockland, 52 Me. 118; Barbour v. Ellsworth, 67 Me. 294; Tilford v. New York, 1 N. Y. App. Div. 199; Turner v. Toledo, 8 Ohio Cir. Dec. 196; Bates v. Houston, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 287.

In White v. Marshfield, 48 Vt. 20, it was held that the duties imposed and the powers conferred upon selectmen by a Vermont statute, when persons were infected with smallpox, were not imposed and conferred upon the town as such; and that the town was not liable for the acts or default of its selectmen in that behalf.

Appropriating House Without Owner's Consent. — No action can be maintained against a city or town for the unlawful acts of its health committee or other officers in taking possession of a house and using it for a smallpox hospital without the consent of the owner and without legal authority. Lynde v. Rockland, 66 Me. 309.

5. Liability of Officer. — Forbes v. Board of Health, 28 Fla. 26; Beers v. Board of Health, 35 La. Ann. 1132, 48 Am. Rep. 256; Brown v. Murdock, 140 Mass. 314; Hersey v. Chapin,

VI. CARRIERS — WHARFINGERS. — A carrier may defend an action for non-delivery of goods or passengers at their place of destination on the ground that such delivery would be a breach of the quarantine regulations in force at that point.¹

VII. ANIMALS. — In a number of states statutes have been passed regulating the introduction of cattle into the state for the purpose of excluding cattle suffering with contagious diseases. Such statutes have been held constitutional.²

QUARANTINE (WIDOW'S). — See the title DOWER, vol. 10, p. 148.

QUARREL. — See note.³

QUARRY. (See also the titles MINES AND MINING CLAIMS, vol. 20, p. 683; PROFIT À PRENDRE, ante.) — The word "quarry" is derived from the French word quarrière. "In the Latin of the lower ages, quadratararius was a stonemason qui marmora quadrat, and hence quarrière, the place where he 162 Mass. 176; Aaron v. Broiles, 64 Tex. 316, 53 Am. Rep. 764.

1. Carriers — Defense. — In Wilson v. Alabama G. S. R. Co., 77 Miss. 714, 78 Am. St. Rep. 543, it was held that if a quarantine order of a state board of health was void, but was maintained by vis major, a railroad might yield thereto without actual collision, and might defend a suit against it by showing that the real cause of its action or failure to act complained of in suit was such uncontrollable necessity.

But in Ft. Worth, etc., R. Co. v. Masterson, (Tex. 1902) 66 S. W. Rep. 833, it was held that the existence of a void quarantine would not justify a railroad company in refusing to receive cattle for transportation.

In St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Smith, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 451, it was held that a common carrier was not liable for its failure to deliver within the state of Texas cattle shipped from another state, where such delivery was forbidden by the live stock quarantine laws of Texas, and the shipper knew that such quarantine was in effect when he shipped the cattle.

Liability to Passenger for Detention. — As to the liability of a carrier to a passenger who is detained in quarantine by reason of an infectious disease among his fellow passengers, see The Normannia, 62 Fed. Rep. 469.

Charter-party. — In Waterbury v. Street, 3 U. S. App. 147, it was held that a steamer was excused from proceeding, as required by a provision of a charter-party, to a certain city by reason of the existence of a quarantine there.

Notice of Quarantine. — In Alabama, etc., R. Co. v. Hayne, 76 Miss. 538, it was held that an instruction that if the carrier knew when he received goods that he could not deliver them on account of the quarantine, he was liable for loss caused by delay, should have been qualified by a statement that there must have been a failure to notify the consignee of such inability.

In St. Clair v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 76 Miss. 473, it was held that if a ticket agent of a railroad company, knowing of the quarantine regulations prohibiting travel on a particular route, of which his principal was the initial carrier, induced a person who was ignorant of the facts to buy a ticket by said route, the initial carrier would be liable for damages resulting from detention, owing to quarantine.

Wharfage. — In Elwell v. Fabre, 52 Hun (N. Y.) 70, where a steamboat line contracted with a wharfinger to pay wharfage "commencing with and including the day of each steamer's arrival in the port of New York," it was held that after arrival at port the steamship company was liable for wharfage upon vessels detained at quarantine.

2. Constitutional Law — Live Stock. (See also the titles ANIMALS, vol. 2, p. 380; INTERSTATE COMMERCE, vol. 17, p. 84.) — Kimmish v. Ball, 129 U. S. 217; Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Haber, 169 U. S. 613; Smith v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 181 U. S. 248; Reid v. People, (Colo. 1902) 68 Pac. Rep. 228; State v. Rasmussen, (Idaho 1900) 59 Pac. Rep. 933, affirmed 181 U. S. 198; St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Smith, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 461.

In Hannibal, etc., R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 465, the Missouri statute against the introduction of Texas cattle was held void upon the ground that no discrimination was made by the law, in the transportation forbidden, between sound cattle and diseased cattle.

3. Quarrel. — "It takes two to make a quarrel." Carr v. Conyers, 84 Ga. 287, 28 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 138.

quadrates, or cuts the stone in squares; the place where the stone is cut in squares, generally a stone-pit; "clearly, therefore, referring to a place upon or above, and not under, the ground."¹

QUARTERLY. — Quarterly is the same as quarter-yearly, and means once in a quarter of a year.²

QUARTERS. — See note 3.

QUARTO DIE POST. — See note 4.

QUARTZ. — See note 5.

QUASH. — To quash is defined as to annul, overthrow, or vacate by judicial action.⁶

QUASI. — As if; a Latin word which marks a resemblance and which supposes a difference between two objects.⁷

1. Quarry — Underground Excavation Not Included. — Bell v. Wilson, L. R. 1 Ch. 309, quoting Encyc. Metropolitana.

In Glasgow v. Farie, 13 App. Cas. 677, it was said: "The word quarry is, no doubt, inapplicable to underground excavations; but the word 'mining' may without impropriety be used to denote some quarries. Dr. Johnson defines a quarry to be a stone mine."

Boundaries. — In Huffman v. Hummer, 18 N. J. Eq. 83, in construing a contract to convey lands bounded on the south by a line ten paces north of certain quarries, the face of the quarries, as worked, being towards the south, it was held that lands bounded on the south by a line ten yards north of the face of the quarries, as worked, were meant, without regard to the extent towards the north of the stone that constituted the quarries.

Working Quarry Lease. — See Miller v. Chester Slate Co., 129 Pa. St. 81.

2. Quarterly. — Kirk v. Hartman, 63 Pa. St. 106. See also Brunswick v. Finney, 54 Ga. 323.

3. Quarters. — In St. Cross Hospital v. de Walden, 6 T. R. 338, it was held that if the reddendum in a renewed hospital lease was so many quarters of corn, it would be understood to mean legal quarters, reckoning the bushel at eight gallons, although the old leases before the statute 22 & 23 Car. II., c. 12, contained the same reddendum, and although formerly the lessees paid by composition, reckoning the bushel at nine gallons. See also the title WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

4. Quarto Die Post. (See also ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR., titles DEFAULTS, vol. 6, p. 62 et seq.; RETURNS, vol. 18, p. 901.) — In Vollmer v. Avondale Marble Co., 10 Pa. Dist. 434, it was said, quoting Co. Litt. 135a: "'The day that is quarto die post is called dies gratia;' for the very day of return is the day in law, and to that day the judgment hath relation; but no default shall be recorded till the fourth day be past, unless it be in a writ of right, where the law alloweth no day but only the day of return.' * * * The allowance of the dies gratia or the quarto die post was the practice in the English courts, and was presumably, upon the adoption of the common law in this state, introduced as the proper and approved practice thereunder, for we find it recognized in a number of our reports and in the Pennsylvania works on practice."

5. Quartz. — See Bridgeport Wood Finishing Co. v. Hooper, 5 Fed. Rep. 69.

6. Quash. — Hood v. French, 37 Fla. 122, quoting Abb. L. Dict.; Crawford v. Stewart, 38 Pa. St. 36.

In Bosley v. Bruner, 24 Miss. 462, it was said: "The term quash, as applied to writs of error or other writs, is predicated of some defect in the writ itself, or in the form of the writ, which defect does not reach to the merits of the case. Tidd's Pr. 161, 1163. The usual practice in this state has been, as far as we have been able to ascertain it, whenever a writ is quashed for mere formal exceptions, to grant a party a new writ upon his original plaint."

Quash and Dismiss Distinguished. — See DISMISS, vol. 9, p. 505.

To Confirm — To Discharge — To Quash. — See West Buffalo v. Walker Tp., 8 Pa. St. 180.

7. Quasi. — Bouv. L. Dict., quoted in People v. Bradley, 60 Ill. 402.

Quasi Conveyance. — A will is a quasi conveyance. May v. Slaughter, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 509.

Quasi-judicial Officer. — In School Dist. No. Two v. Lambert, 28 Oregon 223, it was said: "Where a power vests in judgment or discretion, so that it is of a judicial nature or character, but does not involve the exercise of the functions of a judge, or is conferred upon an officer having no authority of a judicial character, the expression used is generally 'quasi judicial,' so that where, in the exercise of a power, an officer is vested with a discretion, his act is regarded as quasi judicial." See also U. S. v. Arredondo, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 691; U. S. v. California, etc., Land Co., 148 U. S. 31. And see the title PUBLIC OFFICERS, ante.

Quasi-probate Duty. — In Atty.-Gen. v. Dodgington, (1897) 1 O. B. 734, the court said: "The duties specified in the schedule are probate duty and what may be termed 'quasi-probate duty,' namely, duty payable in respect of dispositions not strictly testamentary, but dispositions which the legislature thought proper to include within the scope of the duty as being dispositions which might have a tendency to evade, and be executed for the purpose of evading, probate duty." See also the title SUCCESSION TAXES.

Quasi Public. — In McKinnon v. Bliss, 21 N. Y. 217, upon the admissibility of hearsay evidence, the court said: "But there are, no doubt, other cases in which the same kind of evidence may be received, for the purpose of establishing a mere private right, when the fact to be proved is one of a quasi-public nature, that is, one which interests a multitude of people or an entire community." See also the title DECLARATIONS (IN EVIDENCE), vol. 9, p. 9.

(See also the titles CORPORATIONS (PRIVATE), vol. 7, p. 639; COUNTIES, vol. 7, pp. 901, 902; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, vol. 20, p. 1130; MUNICIPAL SECURITIES, vol. 21, p. 13; SCHOOLS; TOWNS and TOWNSHIPS.) — Associations and government institutions possessing only a portion of the attributes which distinguish ordinary private or public corporations have sometimes been denominated "quasi corporations." Towns and other political divisions, school districts, boards of commissioners, overseers or trustees of the poor, etc., having authority to act and bring suit as united bodies, without regard to their membership for the time being, are quasi corporations of a public character.¹

1. Quasi Corporations. — Wambersie v. Orange Humane Soc., 84 Va. 452.

In School Dist. No. 56 v. St. Joseph F. & M. Ins. Co., 103 U. S. 708, the court said: "What is meant by the words quasi corporation, as used in the authorities, is not always very clear. It is a phrase generally applied to a body which exercises certain functions of a corporate character, but which has not been created a corporation by any statute, general or special."

Counties Held to Be Quasi Corporations. — See the title COUNTIES, vol. 7, pp. 901, 902, and see Granger v. Pulaski County, 26 Ark. 37; Goodnow v. Ramsey County, 11 Minn. 31; Warner v. Beers, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 175.

But in Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Davidson County Ct., 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 637, it was held that a county was neither a corporation nor a quasi corporation.

Board of Commissioners of County Held to Be Quasi Corporation. — See the title COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, vol. 7, p. 975, and see Hamilton County v. Mighels, 7 Ohio St. 109.

School Districts and Trustees Are Quasi Corporations. — People v. Dupuyt, 71 Ill. 654; People v. School Trustees, 78 Ill. 136; Beach v. Leahy, 11 Kan. 23; Andrews v. Estes, 11 Me. 267, 26 Am. Dec. 521; Fourth School-Dist. v. Wood, 13 Mass. 108; Goodnow v. Ramsey County, 11 Minn. 31; Littlewort v. Davis, 50 Miss. 403; Carmichael v. School Lands, 3 How. (Miss.) 84.

In Harris v. School Dist. No. 10, 28 N. H. 62, it was said: "School districts are quasi corporations of the most limited powers known to the laws. They have no powers derived from usage."

In Beach v. Leahy, 11 Kan. 23, it was held that a school district was only a quasi corporation, although declared by the statute to be a body corporate.

But in School Dist. No. 56 v. St. Joseph F. & M. Ins. Co., 103 U. S. 708, it was held that by statute in Nebraska school districts are corporations in the fullest sense of that word, and not quasi corporations.

So in Bassett v. Fish, 75 N. Y. 311, it was said: "Now it is true that the trustees of an ordinary school district are a quasi corporation, and have corporate powers sub modo, and for a few specified purposes only (2 Kent's Com. 278). Had no more been said in this statute than to give power to form a union district, and to elect trustees of it, they would have become such a corporation, and so would the board into which they were constituted. When, then, the legislature by the same act declared that the board was thereby created a body corporate, it must have meant to go further than merely to make a quasi corporation."

Schools. — In 1789 M. bequeathed his estate in trust for the education of the poor children of Orange county. Until 1811 this trust remained unadministered. Then the legislature chartered the Orange Humane Society to administer it, which it did until 1876, when the legislature repealed the Act of 1811, and transferred the fund to the Orange county school board. It was held that this fund had been dedicated to public uses; that the Orange Humane Society was a quasi-public corporation; that over it the legislature, as parens patriæ, had exclusive control; and that the act repealing its charter was a valid act. Wambersie v. Orange Humane Soc., 84 Va. 446.

Street Commissioners Held to Be Quasi Corporation. — See English v. Jersey City, 42 N. J. L. 275.

QUAY. (See also the title WHARVES AND WHARFINGERS.) — A quay is defined to be a wharf at which goods or wares may be landed or shipped.⁴ The word "quay" has several significations. In a strict sense it may be confined to a sloping wall; in another, to the part of a port destined for the reception of merchandise. In a more enlarged sense it designates the whole space which separates the first row of houses of a city from the sea or river.⁵

As to Prosecutions for Bastardy, see State v. Snure, 29 Minn. 132, and the title BASTARDY, vol. 3, p. 875, note.

2. Quasi Derelict. — A case of quasi derelict occurs when the vessel is not abandoned, but those on board are physically and mentally incapable of doing anything for their safety. Sturtevant v. The Bark George Nicholas, 1 Newb. Adm. 452. See also DERELICT, vol. 9, p. 395.

3. Quasi Easements. (See also the title EASEMENTS, vol. 10, pp. 405, 406.) — "There are rights which are mentioned in the books as quasi easements: (1) Where there has been an easement proper with a dominant and servient tenement, and the ownership of such tenements has been unified. In such a case, when the ownership is again severed by a conveyance of the dominant tenement, the way will not pass by the general word 'appurtenances' merely, but there must be particular or general words indicating an intention to grant the way. * * * (2) There are other quasi easements, as when the owner of land has constructed a way or drain over one portion of it for the benefit of another portion, and there has never been a separate ownership of a dominant and servient tenement. This class is again subdivided into those which are called continuous, as a drain or sewer which is used continuously without the intervention of man, and those which are called noncontinuous, as a right of way which can only be used by the intervention of man repeated at intervals when user is desired." Parsons v. Johnson, 68 N. Y. 65.

4. Rowan v. Portland, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 253.

5. Quay. — De Armas v. New Orleans, 5 La. 152, per Martin, J., dissenting.

In New Orleans v. U. S., 10 Pet. (U. S.) 715, the vacant space in contest had been dedicated by the Western Company to public use, so far as a dedication was shown by the plan of the city and the indorsement of the word quay upon it. M'Lean, J., said: "In the agreed facts a quay is admitted to be a vacant space between the first row of buildings and the water's edge, and is used for the reception of goods and merchandise imported or to be exported. * * * The term is well understood in all commercial countries; and whilst there may be some differences of opinion as to its definition, there can be little or none in regard to the probable and commercial signification of it. It designates a space of ground appropriated to the public use — such use as the convenience of commerce requires."

6. Question. — A Michigan statute (now Comp. Laws 1897, § 662) provides that when a probate judge is interested in any question to be decided by the court, he shall be deemed to be incapacitated for acting in the decision of that question. In McFarlane v. Clark, 39 Mich. 45, a will was presented for allowance in a probate court the judge of which was a legatee under the will. The probate judge made an order assigning a date for a hearing thereon, and requiring notice thereof by publication in a daily paper for three successive weeks previous to such day of hearing. The appellate court, per Cooley, J., said: "A question implies something in controversy, or which may be the subject of controversy, but this order was the determination of no question; it was only preliminary to the making of questions. It was in no proper sense judicial action at all." See generally the title JUDGE, vol. 17, p. 732 et seq.

In King v. McLean Asylum, (C. C. A.) 64 Fed. Rep. 339, it was said: "Our conclusion is that this history of the proceedings of the [constitutional] convention shows a settled purpose to include within the federal judicial jurisdiction all 'questions which involve the national peace and harmony,' and that the word questions includes every issue capable of a judicial determination."

S., § 5501, provides that any person acting on behalf of the United States in an official capacity who shall receive any money "with intent to have his decision or action on any question, matter, cause, or proceeding * * * influenced thereby" is punishable. It was held that a certificate which a member of a board of examining surgeons, appointed by the commissioner of pensions, was required to make out was a decision or action on a question, matter, cause, or proceeding. *U. I. IN GENERAL. — Logically considered, the trial of every case is an effort to complete a final syllogism, having, for one premise, matter of law; for the other, matter of fact; and for the conclusion the resulting proposition of liable or not liable, or, in a criminal case, guilty or not guilty. It is the duty of the court to supply the jury, if there is one, with material for the major premise of this syllogism; and it is the duty of the jury to collect from the evidence the minor premise, compare the two, draw the conclusion, and declare it in the verdict.¹

In England and in the United States Courts, where the practice exists of charging the jury as to the court's opinion of the facts and the weight of evidence, the line between law and fact is not drawn as it is in the state courts. The law is burdened and obscured by a great mass of common opinion, general understanding, practice, precedent, and authority (especially as to presumptions), that has passed for law, but is in truth not law, but fact, coming down to us largely by descent from the ancient custom of the court giving the jury its opinion of the evidence. To clear the law of this incumbrance, revive elementary principles strictly legal in their nature, separate the province of the court from the province of the jury, and maintain the latter in its entirety, is a duty put upon the state courts by constitutional provisions.²

II. PROVINCES OF COURT AND JURY RESPECTIVELY — 1. In Trials by Court with Jury — a. IN GENERAL. — The line between the duties of a court and of a jury, in the trial of causes at law, both civil and criminal, is, as will be seen more particularly hereinafter, perfectly well defined; and the rigid observance of it is of the last importance to the administration of systematic justice. While, on the one hand, the jury are the sole ultimate judges of the facts, they are, on the other, to receive the law applicable to the case before them, solely from the publicly given instructions of the court. In this way court and jury are made responsible, each in its appropriate department, for the part taken by each in the trial and decision of causes, and in this way alone can errors of fact and errors of law be traced, for the purpose of correction, to their proper sources.³

b. PROVINCE OF COURT TO DETERMINE QUESTIONS OF LAW IN CIVIL CASES. — The rule is well settled, and it would seem has never been doubted or questioned, that in civil actions tried before a court with a jury it is the province of the court to determine questions of law.⁴

1. See Habersham v. State, 56 Ga. 61.

2. Per Doe, J., in State v. Hodge, 50 N. H. 510.

Distinctions Between Questions of Fact and Issues of Fact. — In Heilig v. Stokes, 63 N. Car. 612, it was declared under Const. N. Car., art. 4, §, 10, which withheld from the Supreme Court jurisdiction to try "any issue of fact," that there is a distinction between questions of fact and issues of fact, and that the words "issues of fact" mean technically such matters of fact as are put in issue by the pleadings, and a decision of which would be final and conclude the parties upon the matters in controversy in the issue.

3. Provinces of Court and Jury Respectively Where Case Is Tried Before Court and Jury. — State v. Smith, 6 R. I. 33, per Ames, C. J. In this case the defendant was prosecuted for a statutory offense and a new trial was granted because the jury sent for and obtained a copy of the statute in order to determine what the law was.

Reference of Questions of Law to Jury. — It is error for the court to refer a question which is purely of a legal character to the determination of the jury;¹ but neither the submission by the court of a question of law to the jury nor the finding of the jury thereon is good ground for exception or assignment of error, provided such finding of the jury is right in law under the evidence in the case.²

c. PROVINCE OF COURT TO DETERMINE QUESTIONS OF LAW IN CRIMINAL CASES — (1) At Common Law. — In the English and the federal courts and in the courts of the great majority of the states the doctrine is well and firmly established that in the absence of any constitutional or statutory provision to the contrary it is the exclusive province of the court to determine all questions of law that arise in criminal prosecutions.³

Review of Authorities. — For able discussions of this question and exhaustive reviews of

to decide legal questions, having the right to find special verdicts giving the facts, and leaving the legal conclusions, which result from such facts, to the court. When they find general verdicts it is their duty to be governed by the instructions of the court as to all legal questions involved in such verdicts. They have the power to do otherwise, but the exercise of such power cannot be regarded as rightful, although the law has provided no means, in criminal cases, of reviewing their decisions in favor of the defendant, whether of law or fact, or of ascertaining the grounds upon which their verdicts are based.¹

Instructions Which Submit Questions of Law to the Jury should not be given in those states where questions of law are for the court,² but it has been almost uniformly held that error in submitting a question of law to the jury is one of which the defendant cannot complain.³

(2) Constitutional Provisions. — In Indiana, Louisiana, and Maryland it is early cases which were decided before all doubts upon the question had been removed, see the following cases: Sparf v. U. S., 156 U. S. 51; U. S. v. Morris, 1 Curt. (U. S.) 48; *State v. Provision of Const. U. S., Art. 6. — Some light is thrown upon this question by Const. U. S., art. 6, which after declaring that the constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States shall be the supreme law of the land, provides that "the judges, in every state, shall be bound thereby." U. S. v. Morris, 1 Curt. (U. S.) 48, which was a criminal prosecution.

Doctrine in Virginia that Court Must Not Voluntarily Instruct Jury as to Law of the Case. — In Virginia it is not the practice of the court unasked to charge the jury upon the law of the case, yet the mere fact that it does so cannot, of itself, be assigned as error. Dejarnette v. Com., 75 Va. 867.

The Court May Direct the Jury to Take the Law from the Court. — Hunt v. State, 81 Ga. 140, following Malone v. State, 66 Ga. 539; Robinson v. State, 66 Ga. 517; Hill v. State, 64 Ga. 453. See also State v. Miller, 53 Iowa 154, holding that it was not error to caution the jury that they had no authority to construe the law except as given them by the court, and that unless their verdict should accord with the law as so given they would be guilty of wilful perjury.

provided by constitution that the jury shall be judges of the law in criminal cases,¹ but it has been declared that such a constitutional provision does not confer upon the jury the right to disregard the law, and that the court may advise the jury that although they have the legal right to disagree with the court as to what the law is, still they should weigh the court's instructions and not disregard them without proper reason.²

(3) Statutory Provisions. — In Connecticut and Illinois statutes have been enacted which either in terms or by implication make juries judges of the law in criminal cases.³

The English Libel Act, otherwise known as Fox's Libel Act, which provides with reference to prosecutions for libel that "the court or judge before whom such indictment or information shall be tried shall, according to their or his discretion, give their or his opinion and directions to the jury on the matter in issue between the king and the defendant, in like manner as in other criminal cases," did not change in any degree the general common-law rule in criminal cases as to the right of the court to decide the law and the duty of the jury to apply the law thus given to the facts, subject to the condition, inseparable from the jury system, that the jury by general verdict of necessity determine in the particular case both the law and the fact as compounded in the issue submitted to them.⁴

2. In Trials by Court Without Jury. — It is the prevailing doctrine of the federal and state courts, in some of which it is fixed by statute, and in most adopted as resting upon reason and sound principle, that the finding of a

Construction of Statute. — In Spies v. People, 122 Ill. 252, it was held that although it is provided by statute that "juries in all criminal cases shall be judges of the law and fact," it is proper to instruct the jury that "if they can say upon their oaths that they know the law better than the court itself, they have the right to do so," but that "before saying this upon their oaths, it is their duty to reflect whether from their study and experience they are better qualified to judge of the law than the court." See also Com. v. Anthes, 12 Gray (Mass.) 29, 5 Gray (Mass.) 185.

A Statute of Georgia in force in 1860 made juries judges of the law as well as of fact. Dickens v. State, 30 Ga. 383. But this statute, it would seem, is no longer in force. See Berry v. State, 105 Ga. 683.

Massachusetts Statute Construed. — It has been held that Stat. Mass. 1855, c. 152, declaring that it shall be the duty of the jury after receiving the instructions of the court "to decide at their discretion, by a general verdict, both the fact and the law involved in the issue, or to return a special verdict, at their election," does not confer upon the jury the rightful power to determine questions involved against the instructions of the court. Com. v. Anthes, 5 Gray (Mass.) 185, 12 Gray (Mass.) 29.

4. Effect of English Libel Act. — Parmiter v. Coupland, 6 M. & W. 105; Reeves v. Templar, 2 Jur. 137, cited in Sparf v. U. S., 156 U. S. 51.

court sitting without a jury is in the nature of a special verdict, and conclusive as to the facts of the case, where the evidence is not set forth in full and exceptions taken to the findings as not supported by evidence.¹

III. MIXED QUESTIONS OF LAW AND FACT — 1. Definition. — Every case involves one or more questions of law and of fact, and therefore one or more questions of mixed law and fact; but the term "mixed question of law and fact" has come to have a less comprehensive meaning, and, as used in its restricted sense, does not seem to be capable of a very exact definition. It has been declared that although there are some plain lines of demarcation between what are questions of law for the court and questions of fact for the jury, there is a borderland of controversy in which the opposing principles seem to be in continual conflict, and that this conflict often is ended in a reasonable compromise by which the question has become what is termed a "mixed question of law and fact" to be submitted to the decision of the jury under proper instructions of the court.² A mixed question of law and fact seems to be, therefore, the question that arises in that class of cases where the facts are to be determined by the jury and where, in addition, the law, although it affords general principles, does not give the precise rules for the determination of the case, so that it is incumbent upon the jury to ascertain not only the facts, but also the application of the law, stated by the court more abstractly than in ordinary cases, the findings of the jury being not merely findings of fact but findings upon the ultimate question or questions involved in the case as to the rights and liability of the party.³

2. Provinces of Court and Jury Respectively — In General. — Where there is a mixed question of law and fact, as in cases in which there are presented pure questions of law and pure questions of fact, it is the exclusive province of the court to declare to the jury what the law is, and it is the exclusive province of the jury to ascertain what the facts are, the only difference in such case being that the jury are to apply the facts as they may find them to the rules of law which are given in the instructions and make one or more findings which embody not only the facts found but also the jury's application of the law to such facts; e. g., in an action for negligence the court will instruct the jury as to what constitutes negligence, and the jury will find whether or not there was negligence, thereby not only finding the facts, but also applying the law as declared by the court.⁴

Submission of Questions of Law to the Jury. — When a question is a mixed question of law and fact the court should not leave to the jury in part a question of law. Thus, in an action for malicious prosecution, the question of probable cause being a mixed question of law and fact, the court should not leave it to the jury to say as a question of fact on the evidence whether or not there was probable cause. It is the duty of the court to determine whether the proof of certain facts constitutes probable cause, and it is the duty of the jury to say whether or not there is proof of such facts.¹

When Submission of Question of Fact to Jury Is Unnecessary and Improper. — It is only when the evidence is conflicting or the admitted facts are such that reasonable minds may draw different inferences from them that a mixed question of law and fact arises. When the facts are admitted or are undisputed, or where the evidence is not conflicting, there is no question which need be submitted as a question of fact, and the court may withdraw the case from the jury and itself decide all questions which are involved as questions of law; e. g., the question of negligence is often a mixed question of law and fact; but when the direct fact or facts in issue are ascertained by undisputed evidence, and such fact or facts are decisive of the case, a question of law is raised and the court should decide it without submitting any question to the jury.²

3. Illustrations of Mixed Questions of Law and Fact. — Without attempting to enumerate the multitudinous questions which come within this category, it is sufficient to say said by way of illustration that conspicuous among them are the questions what constitutes an estoppel,³ what constitutes negligence,⁴ what constitutes probable cause in an action for malicious prosecution,⁵ and

Illustration of Erroneous Instruction. — Where there is a mixed question of law and fact the court in instructing the jury should not leave it for the jury to determine what the law is. Thus, in an action for negligence an instruction that there can be no recovery by the plaintiff if the injury was caused "by his own neglect or want of care" is erroneous, because it fails to define the character of neglect or want of care which will preclude the recovery. *Northern Cent. 2. Ascertainment and Construction of Laws. — It is almost a self-evident proposition that laws, whether written or statute, domestic or foreign, must be ascertained in the general, and always construed, by the court. Inge v. Murphy, 10 Ala. 885.

When There Is No Question of Fact necessarily, the only question involved is one of law. U. S. v. Carlton, 1 Gall. (U. S.) 400, in which case it was declared by Story, J., that what constitutes an importation is, when all the facts are given, a question of law.

The Question of Jurisdiction is one of law; thus, in an action in which the validity of an order appointing an administrator is in question the validity of such order and the jurisdiction of the court to make it are questions of law for the court. Sims v. Boynton, 32 Ala. 353.

Where Jurisdiction Is Affected by a Question of Boundaries. — The boundary of a state, when a material fact in the determination of the extent of the jurisdiction of a court, is not a simple question of law. The description of a boundary may be a matter of construction, which belongs to the court; but the application of the evidence in the ascertainment of it as thus described and interpreted, with a view to its location and settlement, belongs to the jury. U. S. v. Jackalow, 1 Black (U. S.) 484.

Question of Law as to Validity of Ordinance. — Ex p. Frank, 52 Cal. 606, 28 Am. Rep. 642.

Rules for Ascertaining Damages — Question of Law for Court. — Christian v. Irwin, 125 Ill. 619; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Bonifield, 104 Ill. 223, 8 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 493.

Question of Law as to Presumption of Evidence when Evidence Is Evenly Balanced. — In a suit in equity, when the evidence is evenly balanced, the decision of the court may turn upon a question of law as to what is the presumption in such a case. Cox v. Palmer, 1 McCrary (U. S.) 431, in which case the question was whether an interlineation in a deed was presumably an unauthorized alteration of the instrument after execution.

3. Constitutional Questions. — Scott v. Clark County, 34 Ark. 283, in which case the question was whether the statute had passed both houses of the legislature in a constitutional manner.

Questions of Constitutional Law Are for Court in Criminal Cases. — U. S. v. Shive, Baldw. (U. S.) 510; U. S. v. Callender, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,709; Ex p. Frank, 52 Cal. 606, 28 Am. Rep. 642; State v. McKee, 73 Conn. 18; State v. Main, 69 Conn. 123, 61 Am. St. Rep. 35; Pierce v. State, 13 N. H. 536.

Where the Constitution Makes the Jury the Judges of the Law in Criminal Cases, nevertheless juries are not judges of constitutional questions. State v. Main, 69 Conn. 123, 61 Am. St. Rep. 35; Franklin v. State, 12 Md. 236. See contra, Lyhch v. State, 9 Ind. 541. Compare State v. Buckley, 40 Conn. 246.

4. Questions of Statutory Law Are for the Court in Civil Cases. — Peters v. New Orleans, etc., R. Co., 56 Ala. 528; Evans v. Browne, 30 Ind. 514, 95 Am. Dec. 710.

Questions of Statutory Law Are for the Court in Criminal Cases. — State v. Kimball, 50 Me. 409; Carpenter v. People, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 603.

5. Questions Arising upon Pleadings. — St. James Military Academy v. Gaiser, 125 Mo. 517, 46 Am. St. Rep. 502; Eason v. Miller, 15 S. Car. 202.

Questions for Court as to Whether or Not Indictment Has Been Mutilated. — Com. v. Davis, 11 Gray (Mass.) 4.

Question of Law for Court as to Sufficiency of Plea in Criminal Cases. — Cameron v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1894) 25 S. W. Rep. 288.

Question of Law as to What Issues Are Raised by the Pleadings. — Bardwell v. Ziegler, 3 Wash. 34.

Construction of Pleadings — Question of Law for Court. — Alexander v. Wheeler, 69 Ala. 332.

Question of Law for Court as to Sufficiency of Indictment. — Smith v. People, 47 N. Y. 303.

Where an Issue of Law Is Joined and the validity of a deed or other contract is drawn in question by the state of pleadings for fraud or other cause, it is the province of the court to declare the law arising on the facts presented by the pleadings, and if the conclusion of fraud naturally flows from the facts of the case, the court is competent to declare the deed fraudulent and void. Richards v. Hazzard, 1 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 139.

Questions of Law Arising upon Demurrer to Pleading. — Rooks v. State, 83 Ala. 79.

5. Materiality of Facts as Affecting Rights and Liabilities. — It may be stated as a general rule that all questions as to the materiality of facts as affecting rights and liabilities are questions of law for the court. As an illustration of this rule it may be stated that where a written instrument has been altered it is a question of law for the court and of fact for the jury to determine whether or not the alteration is a material one.¹

6. Questions Arising upon Construction of Documents, Records, and Other Writings — a. IN GENERAL. — It is both the province and the duty of the court in civil cases to expound to the jury all written instruments and to state their legal effect.²

1. Materiality of Facts as Affecting Rights and Liabilities. — Steele v. Spencer, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 552; Overton v. Matthews, 35 Ark. 146, 37 Am. Rep. 9; Newell v. Mayberry, 3 Leigh (Va.) 250, 23 Am. Dec. 261. See also the title ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS, vol. 2, p. 181.

Illustrations — Question of Law as to Construction of Subsequent Promise. — Where the words

Intent. — As a corollary from this rule it follows, of course, that wherever the intent of the parties is to be ascertained from a writing the question is one of law for the court.¹

In Criminal Prosecutions the rule is equally applicable, and it is well settled that the construction of written documents, contracts, and deeds is for the court rather than for the jury.²

Where Written Instrument Has Been Lost. — Even where a written instrument has been lost and parol evidence of its contents has been received its construction is for the court.³

Where Instrument Consists of Written Correspondence. — The rule that it is the duty of the court to construe written instruments is not affected by the fact that the instrument consists of written correspondence extending over a considerable length of time or that it may embrace a great variety of circumstances.⁴

relied on to take a case out of the statute of limitations amount in law to an express promise, there is no necessity for referring their construction to the jury, but the court may instruct them as to the legal effect of the words. Evans v. Carey, 29 Ala. 99.

Question of Law as to Whether Instrument Is Sealed or Not. — Whether a writing sued on is a sealed instrument or not, there being no such ambiguity as would authorize explanatory parol proof, must be determined by the construction of the instrument itself, and is a question peculiarly within the province of the court. Moore v. Leseur, 18 Ala. 606.

The Question Whether a Contract on Its Face and by Its Own Terms Per Se Imports Usury is a question of law to be determined by the court. Woolsey v. Jones, 84 Ala. 88. See also USURY.

Whether a Proposition Made in Writing Is an Offer of Compromise or Not is a question of law for the court. Courtland v. Tarlton, 8 Ala. 532.

Question of Law as to Construction and Effect of Permit from Municipal Authorities. — Where municipal authorities give a permit to construct a vault in a street, the question whether such permit is a protection from liability for damages caused by the flooding of adjoining premises is one of law for the court. Mairs v. Manhattan Real Estate Assoc., 89 N. Y. 498.

Question as to What Constitutes Dedication. — The rule that whether a plat contains a dedication of a strip of ground to the public is a question of law for the court to determine is confined to cases where there was an express dedication by acts done which the dedicator would not be allowed to dispute, and where the only question could be, whether such acts constituted in law a dedication. Tilzie v. Haye, 8 Wash. 187.

Question of Law as to Interpretation of Charter and By-laws of Corporation. — Tennessee River Transp. Co. v. Kavanaugh, 93 Ala. 324; Inge v. Murphy, 10 Ala. 885.

Question of Law as to Construction of Mortgage. — Price v. Mazange, 31 Ala. 701. See also the title MORTGAGES, vol. 20, p. 888.

What Constitutes Compliance with Contract Containing "More or Less" Clause. — The words "more or less" used as descriptive of quantity in a contract of sale are intended to permit the vendor to fulfil his contract by a delivery of so much as may reasonably and fairly be held to be a compliance with the contract after making due allowance for an excess or short delivery arising from the usual or ordinary causes; and what is a reasonable limit and a substantial compliance with such contract, if the facts are not in dispute between the parties, is a question for the determination of the court. Cabot v. Winsor, 1 Allen (Mass.) 546, in which case the court cited Cross v. Eglin, 2 B. & Ad. 106, 22 E. C. L. 36; Moore v. Campbell, 10 Exch. 323; Bourne v. Seymour, 16 C. B. 337, 81 E. C. Question of Fact as to What Construction Has Been Placed upon Writings by Parties. — Where there is conflicting evidence as to what construction has been placed upon a writing by the parties, a question of fact as to what such construction was arises which it is the province of the jury to determine.¹

Where Writings Are Compared and Contrasted. — It is the province of the court to compare and contrast written documents and to state to the jury as a matter of law their meaning and effect upon each other.²

Distinction Depending upon Whether Words Are Used in Ordinary Sense or Not. — It is not proper to submit to the jury the meaning of a word which is apparently used in its ordinary sense, for that is a question of law determinable by the court.³ Where, however, writings contain peculiar words of art, or phrases used in commerce or trade, the determination of the meaning of such words or phrases should be left to the jury; but subject to this ascertainment by the jury it is for the court to decide the meaning of the instruments.⁴

b. QUESTIONS ARISING UPON CONSTRUCTION OF RECORDS. — The construction of judicial records is for the court; thus, questions as to the legal effect of decrees and orders are for the court.⁵

On an Issue of Nul Tiel Record in a criminal prosecution a question of law for the court is presented, and there is no issue to be tried by the jury.⁶

c. WHERE PAROL EVIDENCE IS INTRODUCED TO EXPLAIN WRITINGS. — When the legal operation and effect of a written instrument depend not only upon the meaning and construction of the words used therein, but upon collateral facts in pais and extrinsic evidence, the inference of fact to be drawn from the evidence should be submitted to the jury where such parol evidence is conflicting or different inferences may be drawn from the collateral facts;⁷ but it has been declared that even when extraneous evidence is Construction of Record Is for Court in Criminal Cases. — State v. Gorham, 67 Me. 247, in which case, on a prosecution for being a common seller of intoxicating liquor, the records of prior conviction were introduced in evidence, and it was held that the construction of such records was for the court and that the force and effect of such records and the inference to be drawn from the facts established by them were for the jury. See also State v. White, 70 Vt. 225, citing 1 Greenl. Ev. (12th ed., § 277, and notes 2, 3).

Question of Law for Court as to Legal Effect of Orders of Commissioners' Court as to Effect of Local Option Election. — Irish v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1894) 25 S. W. Rep. 633.

Province of Court with Reference to Plea of Autrefois Acquit. — It is the duty of the court to declare the legal effect of a record which is offered to sustain the plea of autrefois acquit or discontinuance, and the record itself cannot be gainsaid by parol evidence; therefore the court may charge the jury that the pleas are not sustained by the proof, when that is the fact. Martha v. State, 26 Ala. 72.

admitted to aid in the construction of a writing and to show the circumstances under which it is made, it is the province and duty of the court to direct the effect of such evidence and to instruct the jury what shall be the construction if certain facts are proved.¹

7. Questions Arising upon the Evidence — a. ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE — In General. — It is the province of the court to determine all questions on the admissibility of evidence, as well as to instruct the jury in the rules of law by which the evidence is to be weighed.²

Preliminary Questions of Fact Involved in Determining Admissibility of Evidence. — If the decision of the question of the admissibility of evidence depends on the decision of other questions of fact, these preliminary questions of fact are first to be tried by the court, though it may, if it chooses, take the opinion of the jury upon such preliminary questions.³

3. Preliminary Questions of Fact Involved in Determining Admissibility of Evidence. — 1 Greenl. Ev., § 49, which authority was quoted in Scott v. Cox, 20 Ala. 294. See also the title EVIDENCE, vol. 11, p. 496 et seq. And see the following illustrations of the rule stated in the text:

Illustrations of Preliminary Facts Which the Court May Determine — Question Whether Confessions Were Voluntary. — When, on a criminal prosecution, the question arises whether confessions were voluntarily made, the admissibility of the confessions is for the court; but when such confessions are admitted, if the jury, from all the circumstances, are not satisfied that they were voluntary and intelligently made, it is their province and duty to reject them. 1 Greenl. Ev. 219, 230; 1 Phill. Ev. 543, which authorities were cited in State v. Duncan, 64 Mo. 262; Goodwin v. State, 102 Ala. 87. See also the title CONFESSIONS, vol. 6, pp. 548, 580.

Question for Court as to Prima Facie Existence of Conspiracy. — In order to allow the testimony of a conspirator to go to the jury against a fellow conspirator a foundation must be laid by proof sufficient in the opinion of the court to establish prima facie the existence of the

When Court May Submit Preliminary Questions to Jury. — Although the general rule is that matters preliminary to the admission of evidence should be determined by the court, yet when the court is in doubt about the matter it may submit the questions arising upon the preliminary proof to the jury under instructions to make no use of the evidence unless satisfied by the preliminary proof that it is competent.¹

b. COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES. — As will be found discussed more fully in another title of this work, the competency of a witness is always a question of law for the court, even though this question may involve a question of fact as to his qualification.²

c. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE TO GO TO JURY OR SUSTAIN VERDICT — (1) In Civil Cases — (a) In General. — In every civil case at the close of the plaintiff's evidence, and likewise after all of the evidence has been introduced, a question of law arises as to the sufficiency of the evidence to go to the jury; and if the case is submitted to the jury, after a verdict has been returned, a question of law arises as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain such verdict.³ These questions may, of course, be raised or not, at the discretion of the parties.

conspiracy. Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Moog, 78 Ala. 284, 56 Am. Rep. 31, in which case the court cited 1 Greenl. Ev., § 111; Steph. Dig. Ev., art. 4, p. 8; McAnally v. State, 74 Ala. 9; Ormsby v. People, 53 N. Y. 472.

Question of Fact for Court as to Whether Loss of Instrument Has Been Shown. — The question as to whether the loss of an instrument has been sufficiently proved to admit secondary evidence is to be determined by the court. Taylor v. Riggs, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 591; Daly v. Bernstein, 6 N. Mex. 380, in which case the court cited 1 Greenl. Ev., § 558.

Question of Fact for Court as to Whether Document Is Ancient or Not. — Where a deed is offered in evidence as an ancient document and its age is in dispute, it being contended that its date has been altered, it is for the court to inspect the paper and hear such evidence as may be offered concerning its age, and determine whether it bears such marks of suspicion unexplained as to justify its rejection as an ancient document. Wisdom v. Reeves, 110 Ala. 478.

Question of Fact as to Genuineness of Standard of Comparison. — Upon the question whether a given writing or written word is sufficiently proved to have been written by the defendant to allow it to be submitted to the jury as a standard of comparison, the court must pass in the first instance; and on appeal, so far as his decision is of a question of fact merely it must be filed if there is any proper evidence to support it. State v. Thompson, 80 Me. 194, 6 Am. St. Rep. 172; Com. v. Coe, 115 Mass. 481.

Question of Fact Where Evidence of Character Is Offered. — Upon a prosecution for murder the preliminary question whether the conduct of the deceased and the circumstances of the killing were such as to authorize the admission in evidence of his character is one to be determined by the court. King v. State, 90 Ala. 612.

Questions of Fact Arising Where Dying Declarations Are Offered. — Where it is sought to introduce evidence of a dying declaration, the truth of the facts put in evidence to show that the declarations were made in view of speedy death was a matter exclusively for the court to determine, 1 East P. C. 357; Phill. Ev.,

1. When Court May Submit Preliminary Questions to Jury. — Burdge v. State, 53 Ohio St. 512; Turpin v. State, 19 Ohio St. 540; Bartlett v. Hoyt, 33 N. H. 151, wherein it was held that it was within the discretion of the court to submit to the jury the question upon the evidence presented whether a statement made by the defendant was an admission of a fact and thus competent as evidence, or a mere offer or proposition for a settlement, and therefore competent to be submitted to the jury as substantial evidence in the case. See also Downer v. Button, 26 N. H. 344. See further the title EVIDENCE, vol. 11, p. 497.

Submission of Question of Variance to Jury. — In Turpin v. State, 19 Ohio St. 540, which was a prosecution for forgery, the court, being uncertain, left to the jury the question whether there was a variance between the name to the instrument as laid in the indictment and that to the instrument in evidence, and on appeal it was held that this course was proper.

3. Question of Law as to Sufficiency of Evidence to Go to Jury or Sustain Verdict. — United States, — Railway Officials, etc., Acc. Assoc. v. Wil-

(b) Withdrawal of Case from Jury — When Case May Be Withdrawn from Jury. — When the sufficiency of the evidence to go to the jury is raised by a motion for a nonsuit, by a demurrer to the evidence, or by a request for an instruction to find for a particular party, or an instruction which assumes one or more facts in the case as not open to investigation by the jury, according to the practice in the particular state and the circumstances of the case, if the evidence is free from conflict or the facts are undisputed or conclusively proved, so that there is no reasonable chance for drawing different conclusions from them, the court may and must withdraw the whole case from the jury, or the particular fact or facts in issue as to which there is no conflict in the evidence.¹

not asked to do so until after the defendant has introduced evidence, and the evidence introduced by the defendant tends to show the facts sought to be established by the plaintiff.¹

Evidence of Opposite Party Must Be Assumed to Be True. — On application to withdraw the case, or a question of fact, from the jury, whatever may be the particular form or nature of the application the evidence of the opposite party must be assumed to be true, and he must be given the benefit of all legitimate inferences therefrom in his favor.²

Requisite Caution in Withdrawing Case from Jury. — This power of the court to withdraw the case or particular questions of fact from the jury because the evidence is not conflicting should undoubtedly be exercised only in a very clear case, and in no case when the evidence is to any extent conflicting, or when the evidence is such that different minds might honestly draw different conclusions therefrom, and, of course, the inferences or conclusions of the court must be such as can be reasonably drawn from the evidence itself.³

Review on Appeal. — Where the trial court erroneously fails to withdraw the case from the jury, and the verdict returned is wholly unsupported by the evidence, an appellate court will reverse the judgment of the trial court and proceed to render such judgment as ought to have been given below.⁴

Question of Fact for Jury Although There Is No Conflict in the Evidence. — In many cases where the facts are undisputed the effect of them is for the court and not for the decision of the jury. Certain facts, however, may be supposed to be clearly established from which one sensible, impartial man would draw one inference, and another man equally sensible and equally impartial would draw another inference, e. g., in cases where the question is one of negli-

Pennsylvania Statute Authorizing Reservation of Questions of Law. — In Pennsylvania it has been held under statutes authorizing the courts of Common Pleas "to reserve questions of law which may arise at the trial," that while the question "whether under all the evidence" or "upon the whole testimony the plaintiff is entitled to recover" cannot be reserved, because it involves the drawing of inferences of fact from the evidence, which is the province of the jury, the court may reserve the question "whether there is any evidence" of a fact essential to recovery, this question being a pure question of law. *Casey v. gence or contributory negligence; and it is this class of cases, and those akin to it, that the law commits to the decision of a jury, even where there is no conflict of evidence.¹

The "Scintilla Doctrine." — Decided cases may be found where it is held that if there is a scintilla of evidence in support of any theory of the case the court is bound to leave it to the jury, but decisions of high authority have established a more reasonable rule that in every case before the evidence is left to the jury there is a preliminary question for the court, not whether there is literally no evidence, but whether there is any upon which a jury can properly proceed to find a verdict for the party producing it, upon whom the onus of proof is imposed.²

Where Verdict Would Be Set Aside. — It is the settled law that when evidence is of such a character that, should the jury find for one side rather than the other, it would be the duty of the court to set aside such verdict, it will, in the first instance, direct a verdict for the party thus entitled to it.³

Power and Duty of Court to Weigh Evidence. — Where the court is asked to withdraw the case, or one or more questions of fact involved, from the jury, it is not the province of the court to weigh the evidence and determine what are the proper inferences to be drawn therefrom, but the only question is whether there is any testimony tending to establish the fact or facts which the court is asked as a matter of law to find.⁴

Withdrawal of Isolated Questions Which Are Material to Recovery or Defense. — The rule here under discussion that the court may decide as a matter of law that there is no sufficient evidence to go to the jury involves the right and the duty of the court not only to withdraw the case in its entirety from the jury where such action would be proper, but also to withdraw isolated questions of fact which are material to the plaintiff's right of recovery or to the defense; and it is well settled that the court may single out any question as to which there is no conflict of evidence, or as to which different minds could not draw different inferences, and withdraw it from the jury.¹

Withdrawing Case from Jury at Instance of Plaintiff. — There are cases in which the facts being undisputed, e. g., where the facts as to the negligence of the defendant in a given case are undisputed, it becomes the duty of the court to decide as a matter of law what the liability of the defendant is, yet it is only in those cases where the question of fact is entirely free from doubt, and where only one conclusion can be fairly arrived at therefrom, that the court has the right thus to apply the law without the action of the jury.²

When Case Should Not Be Withdrawn from Jury. — It is well settled that it is only when the evidence leaves the material facts admitted or substantially undisputed, and only when these facts are such that reasonable men, in the exercise of an honest and impartial judgment, can fairly draw but one conclusion from them, that the court may properly withdraw the case from the jury. If the evidence relative to the material facts develops a substantial conflict, or from the admitted or established facts the unprejudiced minds of reasonable men may well draw different conclusions, it is the duty of the court to submit the issues to the jury.³

(c) Setting Aside Verdict — When Verdict May Be Set Aside. — It is a question of law for the court to determine whether or not the verdict found by a jury is supported by the evidence, and although the court cannot weigh the evidence, balance conflicts therein, and substitute its own findings for those of the jury, it has unquestioned authority to set aside a verdict which the evidence does not support.¹

Reasonable Doubts as to Meaning of Evidence. — It has been said that it is the better rule in all cases to submit the matter to the jury where there may be reasonable doubt as to the meaning of the evidence. Crudup v. Thomas, 126 N. Car. 333, per Furches, J.

Inferences to Be Drawn from Evidence Must Be Certain and Incontrovertible. — The inferences to be drawn from the evidence must be either certain or incontrovertible, or they cannot be decided upon by the court. Leavitt v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 64 Wis. 228.

1. When Verdict May Be Set Aside in Civil Cases. — In the following civil cases it was held that the court has authority to set aside a verdict when it is not supported by the evidence:

United States. — Kohne v. Insurance Co. of North America, 1 Wash. (U. S.) 123.

Arkansas. — St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Morgart, (Ark. 1888) 8 S. W. Rep. 179.

Virginia. — Piedmont Electric Illuminating Co. v. Pateson, 84 Va. 747.

to it when the proof before the chancellor in the first instance did not warrant him in directing the issue, or, in other words, when the case made at the hearing was such as to entitle the one party or the other to an immediate decree.¹

When Verdict Should Not Be Set Aside. — The court, however, has no authority to disturb a verdict of a jury which is supported by some evidence, even though the jury's findings of fact are not such as the court would have made.²

(2) In Criminal Cases — (a) Withdrawal of Case from Jury — At Instance of Defendant. — In criminal prosecutions the court can and must determine, when it is asked to do so, whether or not the prosecution has made a case for the jury, and if it clearly appears that no offense has been proven it is proper to determine as a question of law that the defendant is not guilty.³

Peremptory Instruction to Find Defendant Guilty. — It is not competent for the court in a criminal case to instruct the jury peremptorily to find the defendant guilty of the offense charged or of any criminal offense less than that charged, because the credibility of the witnesses who have testified to the defendant's guilt is for the jury, and because, as a verdict of acquittal cannot be set aside, if the court could direct a verdict of guilty it could do indirectly that which it has no power to do directly.⁴

Directing the Jury that Defendant Is Guilty if Jury Believes Testimony. — When all the evidence given on the trial proceeds from the state, and it is without conflict, and establishes beyond a doubt the guilt of the accused, it is not error for the court to charge the jury that if they believe the testimony they ought to find the defendant guilty.⁵

Directing Jury that Offense Less than That Charged Is Not Proven. — Where there is no evidence whatever to support a verdict of guilty of an offense less than the one charged, the court may charge the jury as matter of law that the evidence does not authorize any verdict except one of guilty or one of not guilty of the particular offense charged, and such an instruction is not an interference with the legitimate functions of the jury, and therefore with the constitutional right of the accused to be tried by a jury.⁶

State*, 31 Ala. 353, where the defendant was indicted for selling liquor to be "drunk on or about the premises," and, it being shown that the liquor was drunk in a public road in front of the defendant's store, in full view thereof, and within the distance of from ten to twenty steps, it was held that it was proper to instruct the jury that it was drunk about the premises; People v. Neumann, 85 Mich. 98.

Assuming Existence of Facts as Agreed upon by Parties. — It is often a matter of convenience in giving instructions, and avoids circumlocution, to assume the existence of certain facts about which the parties are agreed; and neither party, under such circumstances, can afterwards make the assumption a ground of objection to the instructions. Martin v. People, 13 Ill. 341. See also Theel v. Com., (Pa. 1888) 12 Atl. Rep. 148.

(b) Setting Aside Verdict — At Instance of Defendant. — The court may determine as a question of law that a verdict of guilty in a criminal case is not supported by the evidence, being guided by the same rules as govern the setting aside of verdicts in civil cases except to the extent that such rules are changed by the principle that the defendant in a criminal case must be proven to be guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, and not by a bare preponderance of evidence.¹

At Instance of Prosecution. — It is well settled, however, that where there is a verdict of not guilty the court has no authority to inquire into the correctness of such verdict or set it aside on the ground that there is no evidence to support it.²

V. ENUMERATION OF QUESTIONS OF FACT AND OF MIXED QUESTIONS OF LAW AND FACT — 1. In General. — It would not be practicable or useful to attempt to enumerate fully the myriads of questions of fact and of questions of mixed law and fact which it is the province of a jury to determine; and accordingly it is deemed proper to state merely the general rules for ascertaining what are such questions and to state some of the most common questions which have been held to be proper for submission to the jury.

2. Questions Arising upon Evidence Which Is Not Conflicting. — Even when there is no conflict in the evidence, or when the facts are not disputed, if different minds might honestly draw different conclusions from the evidence, or from the undisputed facts, a question of fact is presented which should be left to the jury for its determination.³

3. Questions Arising upon Conflicting Evidence. — In both civil and criminal actions where the evidence on material points is conflicting or where, the facts being undisputed, different minds might draw different conclusions from

Withdrawal of Case from Jury as Respects Defense of Insanity. — In State v. Stephens, 96 Mo. 637, it was held that where the defendant introduces evidence to show his insanity and the same is stricken out at his request, the court may charge the jury that there is no evidence authorizing an acquittal on the ground of his insanity.

Where Auditor's Report Is Put in Evidence.—In Massachusetts it has been held that where the plaintiff puts in evidence an auditor's report in his favor it is for the jury to say what weight they will give to the report, the report being merely the auditor's judgment on evidence which the jury has heard. Wyman v. Whicher, 179 Mass. 276.

Questions of Fact Dependent upon Philosophical Principles and Mechanical Skill and Judgment. — Where a question before a jury is dependent for its solution upon philosophical principles and mechanical skill and judgment, the conclusions of the jury will be respected on appeal as much as in any other case.¹

Question of Fact for Jury on Plea in Abatement. — Where the defendant in a criminal prosecution pleads in abatement, questions arising upon such plea other than those which are determinable upon a bare inspection and construction of a record are for the jury.²

Question of Fact for Jury on Plea of Former Jeopardy. — Where, on a criminal prosecution, the defendant pleads a previous acquittal or conviction of the offense charged and the issue is not to be tried upon the record, but upon parol evidence as to the identity of the offense previously charged or the identity of the defendant, a question of fact is presented for the jury.³

Questions Arising upon Matters of Which Court Will Take Judicial Notice. — It has been held that in a civil action where the matter is one of which the court will take judicial notice there is no question to be left to the jury.⁴

By a Statute of New Mexico in force in 1881 it was provided as follows: "All issues of fact in a criminal case shall be tried by a jury." Territory v. Romine, 2 N. Mex. 114.

Uncontradicted Testimony Is Never Equivalent to an Admitted Fact, as the jury may not believe it, and this is especially so where the alleged facts are peculiarly within the knowledge of the witness. Per Douglas, J., in Mitchell v. Carolina Cent. R. Co., 124 N. Car. 236.

Interpretation of Testimony. — Where on a prosecution for cheating by false pretenses the prosecutor testified that he had "every confidence in" the defendant, it was for the jury to say how far such testimony was a denial of reliance upon the false pretense. Com. v. Coe, 115 Mass. 481.

Where a physician testifies on a prosecution for assault and battery that he had examined a wound, but did not examine another wound, a charge to the jury that "they could consider whether the witness in saying that he did not examine the wound meant that he did not examine it as a physician, or that he did not seek or look at it at all," is not erroneous. Rosenbaum v. State, 33 Ala. 354.

4. Questions Arising upon Matters of Which Court Will Take Judicial Notice. — Gilbert v. Flint, etc., R. Co., 51 Mich. 488, 47 Am. Rep. 592, 15 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 491, in which case it was held that it was error to leave to the jury the question whether or not a box freight car standing still at a highway crossing is of itself a frightful object to a horse of ordinary gentleness. See also Towns v. Pratt, 33 N. H. 345, 66 Am. Dec. 726.

cumstantial the question presented is peculiarly one for the jury, and this observation applies both in civil actions and criminal prosecutions.¹

4. Questions Arising upon Credibility of Witnesses. — As a general proposition, applicable alike to civil actions and criminal prosecutions, the credibility of all the testimony is a question of fact which must be submitted to the jury. Hence, as a general rule, in charging juries it is improper to presume, or to state as a fact, any material matter which depends upon the sufficiency of all the testimony for its establishment.²

Sufficiency of Corroborating Evidence.—Where the rules of law require that no verdict, judgment, or decision shall be based on the testimony of a witness unless such witness is corroborated, the sufficiency of the corroborating evidence adduced is a question solely for the jury.¹

Where Testimony of Plaintiff as Witness Is Contradictory.—Where the answers to the questions propounded to the plaintiff as a witness are contradictory, it is for the jury to determine which answers are to be believed.²

5. Questions Arising upon Oral Contracts.—Where a contract is verbal and the evidence is conflicting as to its terms, a question of fact for the jury is presented as to what are the terms of the contract;³ but where there is no conflict as to the terms of an oral contract its construction is a question of law for the court, and not a question for the jury.⁴

6. Existence, and Natural Events, Conditions, and Phenomena.—Where the evidence is conflicting or the facts adduced are such that different inferences may be drawn from them, questions as to the existence of things animate or inanimate, as to the nature and condition of such things, and as to the occurrence of natural phenomena, are questions of fact for the jury.⁵

edge or notice of facts or circumstances is a question of fact for the jury.¹

d. BELIEF. — What a person believed is a question of fact for the jury.²

e. INTENT — (1) In Civil Actions. — The question of intent in civil actions is commonly one for the jury, where it does not follow as a clear deduction from undisputed facts, or is not imputed by the mere construction by the court of a written instrument, unaided by extrinsic evidence. In such instances it becomes a question of law to be determined by the court.³

(2) In Criminal Cases. — In every accusation of crime there is involved the question of felonious or criminal intent, which is usually, if not in all cases, a question of fact peculiarly within the province of the jury to decide. A charge to the jurors that upon the facts testified to, assuming them to be true, it would be their duty to convict the prisoner, if ever proper, would be so only in the very rare cases in which the force of the facts proved is such as to make the inference of criminal intent an inference of law and not of fact.¹

f. MOTIVE. — The question of motive is one of fact for the jury.²

g. MALICE. — It is for the court to define the legal import of the word "malice," but the question whether it existed in a particular instance is one of fact for the jury.³

Where Evidence Is Not Conflicting. — In all cases free from doubt, and where the evidence is not conflicting, the question of intent is one for the court. Johnson v. State, 73 Ala. 523, which was a prosecution for larceny.

Question of Fact as to Purpose. — In Armstrong v. State, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 247, which was a prosecution for keeping a room to be used and occupied for gambling, it was held that it was a question of fact for the jury whether the room was occupied for that purpose.

Question of Fact as to Purpose for Which Paper Was Emitted. — On a prosecution for the statutory offense of emitting paper for general circulation, the question whether it was emitted for general circulation is one of fact for the jury. Jordan v. State, 52 Ala. 188.

Question of Fact as to Whether Act Was Done Wilfully. — People v. Pine, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 566, which was a prosecution for murder.

2. Question of Fact as to Motive. — Salm v. State, 89 Ala. 56; Burke v. State, 71 Ala. 377; Cummings v. Wyman, 10 Mass. 465. See the titles treating of particular crimes.

3. Question of Fact as to Malice. — United States. — U. S. v. Alden, 1 Sprague (U. S.) 95. Alabama. — Dixon v. State, 128 Ala. 54; King v. State, 90 Ala. 612.

Question of Fact for Jury as to Whether Drunkenness Incapacitated Defendant from Entertaining Malice. — King v. State, 90 Ala. 612.

9. Relations of Persons. — Questions as to what relations exist or did exist between persons are ordinarily questions of fact to be determined by the jury under appropriate instructions from the court.¹

10. Nature, Quality, and Condition of Things — a. QUESTIONS OF FACT. — Questions as to the nature, quality, and condition of things, regarded simply as natural things and not as things which the law defines and requires to possess certain characteristics, are, where the evidence is conflicting, pure questions of fact which it is the sole province of the jury to determine.²

Distinction Between Malice in Law and Malice in Fact. — There is a distinction between malice in fact and malice in law. Malice in law is not necessarily inconsistent with an honest or even a laudable purpose, and is a presumption of law from certain facts proved, whereas malice in fact is actual malice, i. e., such as is inconsistent with an innocent purpose. For example, to make an accusation knowing it to be false is actually malicious. Whether actual malice exists in any given case is a question of fact for the jury. Jellison v. Goodwin, 43 Me. 287, 69 Am. Dec. 62.

1. Relations of Persons — United States. — Irwin v. Williar, 110 U. S. 506.

Fraudulent Conveyances — Question of Fact as to Relationship of Parties. — In Smith v. Collins, 94 Ala. 394, it was held that where it is sought to have a conveyance declared fraudulent, it is proper to instruct the jurors that they are the sole judges of the weight to be given to the fact of relationship of the parties to the conveyance, and that no presumption of fraud is drawn from such relationship.

Question of Law for Court as to Whether Railroad Company Was Carrier or Warehouseman. — See Columbus, etc., R. Co. v. Ludden, 89 Ala. 612, in which case there was no conflict in the evidence as to the length of time which had elapsed from the arrival and unloading of the goods to the time at which it was claimed the liability as common carrier ceased. The court cited Roth v. Buffalo, etc., R. Co., 34 N. Y. 548, 90 Am. Dec. 736.

2. Questions of Fact as to Nature, Quality, and Condition of Things. — Buffington v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 64 Mo. 246, in which case it was held that where there is conflicting evidence as to whether the buffer of an engine and the buffer of a car would strike each other on a level track, the question was one of fact for the jury.

Question of Fact as to Whether Thing Is in Good Condition or Is Defective. — Harris v. Great Barrington, 169 Mass. 271; Pomaski v. Grant, 119 Mich. 675; Young v. Webb City, 150 Mo. 333; Chamberlain v. Enfield, 43 N. H. 356, in which case the question was whether a road was encumbered; Forker v. Sandy Lake, 130 Pa. St. 123, 31 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 61, wherein the question was whether a sidewalk was sufficient; McCloskey v. Moies, 19 R. I. 297, wherein the question was whether a highway was defective; Galveston v. Hemmish, 72 Tex. 558, 13 Am. St. Rep. 828, wherein the question was whether a defect in a highway was open and visible; Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Robertson, 82 Tex. 657, 27 Am. St. Rep. 929.

Question of Fact as to Whether Stains Were Bloodstains. — Campbell v. State, 23 Ala. 44.

Question of Fact as to Extent and Character of Rain Storm. — Stoher v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 91 Mo. 509, 31 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 229, which was an action for personal injuries caused by the giving way of a roadbed.

Question of Fact as to Practicability of Covering Pit. — In Beauchamp v. Saginaw Min. Co., 50 Mich. 163, 45 Am. Rep. 30, it was held that it was a question of fact for the jury whether it was practicable and necessary to cover a mining pit when blasting.

Question of Fact as to Suitableness of Appliances for Purposes for Which Used. — Lambert v. Pembroke, 66 N. H. 280.

Question of Fact as to Whether Material Is Inflammable. — See Gram v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 1 N. Dak. 252.

Question of Fact as to Drainage Capacity of Culvert. — Stoher v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 91 Mo. 509, 31 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 229, which was an action for personal injuries caused by the giving way of a roadbed.

Question of Fact as to Whether Light Was Brilliant and Conspicuous. — Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Conlan, 101 Ill. 93, 6 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 243.

Question of Fact as to Whether Liquor Is Intoxicating. — Allred v. State, 89 Ala. 112; Wall v. State, 78 Ala. 417; Intoxicating Liquor Cases, 25 Kan. 751, 37 Am. Rep. 284; State v. Muncey, 28 W. Va. 494.

b. MIXED QUESTIONS OF LAW AND FACT. — Where, however, a thing is one which the law defines and which, to come within the legal definition, must possess certain characteristics other than those impressed upon it by nature, e. g., baggage, a fixture, a homestead, and like things, the question whether it has the nature and qualities or is in the condition required by law is a question of mixed law and fact, and is, where the evidence is conflicting, or the facts are such that different minds might draw different inferences, one for the jury to find under instructions from the court as to what the law requires.¹

11. Ownership and Possession of Property — a. OWNERSHIP. — What constitutes ownership of or title to property as an abstract legal proposition is, of course, a question of law for the court, but in particular cases where the evidence is conflicting, whether the property is real or personal, and whether the question arises in a civil action or a criminal prosecution, the question is one of mixed law and fact, i. e., one for the determination of the jury guided by the court's instructions.²

b. POSSESSION — (1) In General. — Likewise the question who was or is in possession is, in strictness, a mixed question of law and fact; but ordinarily, by reason of there being no question raised as to what in law amounts to possession, the question is practically one of fact only.³

(2) Nature of Possession. — Questions as to the nature of possession as fulfilling some requirement of law, e. g., the question whether there was adverse possession, are questions of mixed law and fact to be determined by the jury under the court's instructions.⁴

Question of Fact for Jury as to Whether Animals Were Diseased. — Troy v. State, 10 Tex. App. 319.

Question of Fact as to Whether Benefits Resulted to Abutting Owners from Elevated Railroad. — Bischoff v. New York El. R. Co., 61 N. Y. Super. Ct. 211.

Cas., § 641; Jones v. Priestester, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas., § 614. See also the title BAGGAGE, vol. 3, pp. 535, 536, 542, 565.

Mixed Question of Law and Fact as to What Are Fixtures. — De Lacy v. Tillman, 83 Ala. 155, 80 Ala. 103; Gresham v. Taylor, 51 Ala. 505; Philadelphia Mortg., etc., Co. v. Miller, 20 Wash. 607, 72 Am. St. Rep. 138. See also the title FIXTURES, vol. 13, p. 600.

Mixed Questions of Law and Fact as to What Is a Deadly Weapon. — Where the deadliness of a weapon depends upon its particular character or upon the manner in which it is used, the question is one for the jury under an instruction as to what constitutes a deadly weapon. Jenkins v. State, 82 Ala. 25; Dolan v. State, 81 Ala. 11; Sylvester v. State, 71 Ala. 17; State v. Rigg, 10 Nev. 284. See also Garrett v. State, 97 Ala. 18.

Mixed Question of Law and Fact as to Navigability of Water. — Olive v. State, 86 Ala. 88; Peters v. New Orleans, etc., R. Co., 56 Ala. 528; Rhodes v. Otis, 33 Ala. 578, 73 Am. Dec. 439; Little Rock, etc., R. Co. v. Brooks, 39

Ark. 403, 43 Am. Rep. 277; Treat v. Lord, 42 Me. 552, 66 Am. Dec. 298; Morgan v. King, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 285; Eulrich v. Richter, 37 Wis. 226.

Mixed Question of Law and Fact as to What Is a Public Place. — On a prosecution for betting at a game played with cards at a public house or other public place, it is a question for the jury whether the house at which the defendant is shown to have played and bet was a public place. Jackson v. State, 117 Ala. 155.

Erroneous and Insufficiently Qualified Expressions as to the nature of the above questions are sometimes found in the books, it being said by courts and text writers that such questions are questions of fact for the jury, but they clearly mean that such questions, so far as they depend upon conflict in the evidence, are questions for the jury, and do not mean that they are questions which the jury may determine without instructions from the court.

2. Mixed Question of Law and Fact as to What Constitutes Ownership. — Smart v. Hodges, 105 Ala. 634; Tait v. Murphy, 80 Ala. 440; Corbett v. State, 31 Ala. 329; Stanton v. French, 91 Cal. 274, 25 Am. St. Rep. 174; Hanlen v. Baden, 6 Kan. App. 635; State v. Cardelli, 19 Nev. 319; Slattery v. Donnelly, 1 N. Dak. 264; Trovillo v. Tilford, 6 Watts (Pa.) 468, 31 Am. Dec. 484; Peet v. Dakota F. & M. Ins. Co., 1 S. Dak. 462. See also Pryor v. Portsmouth Cattle Co., 6 N. Mex. 44.

3. Mixed Question of Law and Fact as to What Constitutes Possession. — Moody v. Amazon Ins. Co., 52 Ohio St. 12, 49 Am. St. Rep. 699, in which case the court said: "What constitutes vacancy or nonoccupancy of a building is a question of law; but whether a building is vacant or unoccupied, or not, within the meaning of the law, is a question of fact for the jury."

4. Mixed Question of Law and Fact as to Nature of Possession — Alabama. — Wisdom v. Reeves,

12. Performance or Accomplishment of Acts and Nature of Acts — a. IN GENERAL. — Questions as to whether acts have been performed or accomplished, by whom they were done, and their nature, are never, where the evidence is conflicting, such that they can be decided by the court without submission to the jury. The precise nature of such questions has been somewhat obscured and involved in doubt by loose expressions contained in judicial opinions where the questions of law involved were conceded, or were not seriously pressed, with the result that there is a tendency to say that some of such questions are questions of fact for the jury, even though technically they are mixed questions of law and fact. All difficulties are removed when it is considered that the questions whether an act was done, how it was accomplished, and by whom it was performed, are purely questions of fact when the acts are considered merely as physical acts, but that the questions are mixed questions of law and fact, to be determined by the jury under the instructions of the court, when they are questions as to whether or not rules of law have been complied with, or violated, or ignored. For examples, the question whether a bell was rung is one of fact, but it is a mixed question of law and fact whether a husband has abandoned his wife; and it is a question of fact whether an injury was self-inflicted or inflicted by another, but a question of mixed law and fact whether an act was done by an agent as such or by one in his own behalf — questions of mixed law and fact, of course, always involving questions of fact for the jury.¹

Acceptance. — The question of acceptance is ordinarily a question of mixed law and fact.²

Acquiescence, Ratification, and Waiver. — The questions of acquiescence, ratification, and waiver are questions of fact for the jury, to be determined under the instruction of the court as to the legal effect of the party's acts, although ordinarily they are loosely spoken of as being pure questions of fact.³

Delivery. — The question whether property has been delivered is, strictly speaking, one of mixed law and fact, but ordinarily, by reason of the fact that there is no question raised as to what the law requires with reference to a delivery, the question is spoken of as one of fact.⁴

Performance of Contract. — Whether a contract has been performed or complied with is a question of fact for the jury under the instructions of the court, though in many cases the question of law is lost sight of and the question, in disregard of its technical nature, is considered as a mere question of fact.⁵

Miscellaneous Questions of Mixed Law and Fact. — In the note will be found further illustrations of questions of mixed law and fact as to the performance of acts.⁶

7. Question of Fact as to Place or Location. — Cook v. State, 83 Ala. 62, 3 Am. St. Rep. 688.

Question of Boundaries. — It is a question for the court to decide what are the boundaries in a deed, the construction of deeds and writings being a question of law for the court, but upon conflicting evidence it is a question of fact for the jury to determine what land is located within the boundaries as ascertained by the court.¹

18. Identity — a. IN GENERAL. — All questions of identity are, where the evidence is conflicting, questions of fact for the jury.²

b. OF PERSONS. — The question of personal identity is one solely for the jury.³

c. OF PROPERTY. — Where the evidence is conflicting respecting the identity of property, a question of fact is presented which should be submitted to the jury.⁴

19. Cause and Effect — a. IN GENERAL. — Questions as to cause and effect are questions of fact for the jury.⁵

b. PROXIMATE CAUSE. — The question as to what is the proximate cause of an injury or loss is ordinarily, where the evidence is conflicting, one of fact for the jury.⁶

20. Reasonableness — a. IN GENERAL. — When the evidence is conflicting the question of reasonableness is never one of law for the court. Whether it is a question of fact or a question of mixed law and fact depends upon the holding that on a prosecution for arson it is a question of fact for the jury whether a barn charged to have been burnt was within the curtilage; Reynolds v. West, 1 Cal. 322; State v. Spayde, 110 Iowa 726, wherein the question was as to venue; Hurley v. Morgan, 1 Dev. & B. L. (18 N. Car.) 425, 28 Am. Dec. 579; Doe v. Paine, 4 Hawks (11 N. Car.) 64, 15 Am. Dec. 507.

precise nature of the question and the form in which it is put — it being a question of mixed law and fact if its determination requires the application of rules of law, otherwise a question of pure fact.¹

When the Facts Are Ascertained the question of reasonableness may be one of law for the court which should not be submitted to the jury.²

Reasonableness of Ordinance. — The reasonableness of an ordinance is, as a general proposition, a question of law for the court.³

b. OF ACTS, METHODS, AND INSTRUMENTALITIES — In General. — As a general proposition the question as to the reasonableness of an act is a mixed question of law and fact.⁴

Necessity for Acts. — Whether or not an act was reasonably necessary is a mixed question of law and fact for the jury.⁵

Probable Cause. — The question of probable cause in an action of malicious prosecution is ordinarily a mixed question of law and fact.⁶

Reasonableness of Instrumentalities. — As a general proposition it is a mixed question of law and fact whether a suitable instrument was employed in the performance of an act.⁷

Reasonableness of Rule or Regulation. — Although there is a conflict of authority

1. Question of Fact as to Reasonableness. — California Southern R. Co. v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 67 Cal. 59, 20 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 309, in which case it was held that a question as to how one railroad should cross another, whether on a level, above, or below the other road, in order to secure the greatest public benefit and least private injury, was a question of fact for the jury.

Question of Fact as to Whether Property Was Reasonably Necessary. — Jaquith v. Scott, 63 N. H. 5, 56 Am. Rep. 476; Richards v. Hubbard, 59 N. H. 158, 47 Am. Rep. 188, which were cases arising under the statute of exemptions.

Mixed Question of Law and Fact as to Reasonableness. — It is in one sense the province of the court to define what in law will constitute a reasonable or adequate provocation for an act, but it is not in ordinary cases the province of the court to determine whether the provocation proved in a particular case is sufficient or reasonable. This is essentially a question of fact for the jury, to be decided with reference to the peculiar phase of each particular case, under proper instructions from the court. Maier v. People, 10 Mich. 212, 81 Am. Dec. 781.

2. Question of Law as to Reasonableness Where Facts Are Ascertained. — St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Adcock, 52 Ark. 406, 40 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 682. See also St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Denty, 63 Ark. 177; Riggin v. Patapsco Ins. Co., 7 Har. & J. (Md.) 279, 16 Am. Dec. 302; Tobias v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 103 Mich. 330.

The Doctrine as Laid Down by Lord Mansfield is that "wherever a rule can be laid down in respect to reasonableness it should be decided by the court and adhered to by every one for the sake of certainty." Tindal v. Brown, 1 T. R. 167.

3. Question of Law as to Reasonableness of Ordinance. — Lake View v. Tate, 130 Ill. 247; Kneedler v. Norristown, 100 Pa. St. 368, 45 Am. Rep. 383. See also the title ORDINANCES, vol. 21, pp. 988, 989.

State*, 82 Ala. 10; Morris v. Platt, 32 Conn. 75; Gallagher v. State, 3 Minn. 270; Nalley v. State, 28 Tex. App. 387; State v. Barr, 11 Wash. 481, 48 Am. St. Rep. 890; Palmer v. State, 9 Wyo. 40.

7. Lander v. Seaver, 32 Vt. 114, 76 Am. Dec. 156, wherein it was held that the question whether a rawhide is a proper instrument for the punishment of school children is a question of fact for the jury on a suitable instruction.

upon the question, the better opinion appears to be that the reasonableness or unreasonableness of a rule or regulation made by a party, e. g., a railroad company, is generally a mixed question of law and fact. As its reasonableness depends upon the existence of particular facts and circumstances, it is necessarily a question for the jury under appropriate instructions from the court, but if the facts are determined the question is a proper one for the court.¹

c. OF TIME — (1) In General. — Ordinarily the reasonableness of the time at which an act was done or which was allowed to elapse before the doing of an act is a mixed question of law and fact, not only where the evidence is conflicting as to the time or lapse of time, but even where the facts are established, and it should be left to be decided by the jury under the direction of the court upon the particular circumstances of the case. The time, however, may be so short or so long that the court will declare it to be reasonable or unreasonable as a matter of law.²

(2) As Respects Notice. — In accordance with the rule that has just been stated, the reasonableness of a notice as respects the time at which it was given or the length of time that was given by the notice is a mixed question of law and fact, or a question of law for the court.³

d. OF QUANTITY. — Reasonableness of quantity is, as a general proposition, a mixed question of law and fact.¹

VI. INVASION OF JURY'S PROVINCE BY COURT — Doctrine Stated. — As a corollary from the rule which has been stated throughout this title, that it is the province of the jury to determine questions of fact, it is well settled that the court must not, in either a civil action or a criminal prosecution, invade the province of the jury by determining questions of fact, by assuming that a fact as to which there is a conflict in the evidence has been proven, or by otherwise expressing an opinion as to the facts in the case.²

QUESTIONS OF LAW AND FACT—QUITCLAIM.

QUIA TIMET. — See the title BILLS QUIA TIMET, 3 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 599.

QUICK DISPATCH. — See the title DEMURRAGE, vol. 9, p. 237, and see DISPATCH, vol. 9, p. 539.

QUICKSAND. — Quicksand is defined to be "a fine-grained, loose sand, into which a ship sinks by her own weight as soon as the water retreats from her bottom."²

QUICK WITH CHILD. (See also the titles ABORTION, vol. 1, p. 187; CHILD — CHILDREN, vol. 5, p. 1084; MEDICAL JURISPRUDENCE, vol. 20, p. 535; MURDER AND MANSLAUGHTER, vol. 21, p. 101; and see DE VENTRE INSPICIENDO, vol. 8, p. 832.) — See note 3.

QUIET ENJOYMENT. (See also the title COVENANTS, vol. 8, p. 97.) — A covenant for quiet enjoyment is defined to be an assurance against the consequences of a defective title and of any disturbances thereupon.⁴

QUIET HOUSE — See note 5.

QUIETING TITLE—REMOVAL OF CLOUD. — See the title QUIETING TITLE — REMOVAL OF CLOUD, 17 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 274, and in this work the title CLOUD ON TITLE, vol. 6, p. 149.

QUIT. — See note 6.

QUI TAM ACTIONS. — See the titles PENALTIES AND PENAL ACTIONS, 16 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 229.

QUITCLAIM. (See also the title DEEDS, vol. 9, p. 104.) — A quitclaim deed is defined as a form of deed of the nature of a release.⁷

Texas Statute Prohibiting Charge on Weight of Evidence. — Martin v. State, 38 Tex. Crim. 285, which case was decided under Rev. Code Crim. Pro. Tex., §§ 705, 716.

Washington Constitution. — Const. Wash., art. 4, § 16, provides as follows: "Judges shall not charge juries with respect to matters of fact, nor comment thereon, but shall declare the law." Bardwell v. Ziegler, 3 Wash. 34, in which case it was declared that this constitutional provision is more restricted than the constitutional provisions of any other state, and intends that the judge shall make no reference to the testimony for the purpose of informing the jury what it proves or does not prove, but shall content himself with declaring the law.

2. Quicksand. — The Sandringham 10 Fed. Rep. 562, quoting Smyth's Dict. Naut. Terms.

3. Quick with Child. — In State v. Emerich, 13 Mo. App. 493, it was said: "The physicians all testified that it was formerly held in the profession that the fœtus was not alive until it was felt by the mother to move, and that when this happened it used to be said that she was quick with child, and not before; but that in the present stage of medical science it is known that the fœtus is quick from the moment of conception, in the sense that it is alive from that moment."

4. Quiet Enjoyment. — Kane v. Mink, 64 Iowa 86, quoting Bouv. L. Dict.

5. Quiet House. (By the Texas statute (now Rev. Stat. 1895, art. 3380), requiring from liquor dealers a bond conditioned that an open, quiet, and orderly house shall be kept, a quiet house is defined to be "one in which no music, loud or boisterous talking, yelling, or indecent or vulgar language is allowed, used, or practiced, or any other noise calculated to disturb or annoy persons residing or doing business in the vicinity." Cunningham v. Porchet, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 82. See also State v. Austin Club, 89 Tex. 20.

6. Quit — Landlord and Tenant. — See the title LANDLORD AND TENANT, vol. 18, p. 396.

Quit — Sell — Release. (See also the title DEEDS, vol. 9, p. 136 et seq.) — In Gordon v. Haywood, 2 N. H. 404, it was said: "The first objection to the words used by the husband is that the expression 'quit my right,' etc., is not tantamount to the words 'sell' or 'release.' But the best lexicographers assign to it a similar meaning; and by it the husband clearly intended to abandon, resign, or quitclaim to the grantee all his interest in the premises."

Quit in Sense of "to Leave Permanently." — See Prieto v. St. Alphonsus Convent of Mercy, 52 La. Ann. 631.

7. Quitclaim. — Nathans v. Arkwright, 66 Ga. 186, quoting Bouv. L. Dict.

In Ely v. Stannard, 44 Conn., 533, it was said: "A quitclaim or release deed is one of the regular modes of conveying property known to the law, and it is almost the only mode in practice where a party sells property and does not wish to warrant the title." See also Hoyt v. Ketcham, 54 Conn. 60.

QUITRENT. — See note 1.

QUOD CUM. — Quod cum in pleading means “for that whereas;” a form of introducing matter of inducement in those actions in which introductory matter is allowed to explain the nature of the claim, as assumpsit and case. This form is not allowable to introduce the matter which constitutes the gravamen of the charge, as such matter must be stated by positive averment, while quod cum introduces the matter which depends upon it by way of recital merely.²

In State v. Kemmerer, 14 S. Dak. 174, it was said: “A form of deed of the nature of a release, containing words of grant as well as release, commonly known as a quitclaim deed, has long been in use in this country.” 3 Washb. Real Prop. (5th ed.), p. 376.”

Operative Words. — The operative words of a quitclaim deed are “remise, release, and forever quitclaim.” Citizens' Bank v. Shaw, 14 S. Dak. 204, quoting Bouv. L. Dict. and And. L. Dict. See also the title DEEDS, vol. 9, p. 137, note.

Recording Acts. (See also the title RECORDING ACTS.) — In Wilhelm v. Wilken, 75 Hun (N. Y.) 555, affirmed 149 N. Y. 447, it was held that a so-called quitclaim deed which contained the words “remise, release, and quitclaim” as the words of conveyance was a conveyance within the recording acts. The court said: “An ordinary quitclaim deed is a deed of lease and release, and by this statute is deemed to be a grant.”

Release. — In Hill v. Dyer, 3 Me. 445, it was held that under a power to execute a release title to land, a deed purporting to grant, sell, and quitclaim was a substantial execution of the authority, the word quitclaim being of an equivalent meaning with the term “release.” See also RELEASE.

Ohio. — State v. Green, 37 Ohio St. 227; Deglow v. Kruse, 57 Ohio St. 434.

Pennsylvania. — Com. v. Read, 2 Ashm. (Pa.) 261; Doyle's Nomination, 7 Pa. Dist. 635.

South Carolina. — State v. Delieesseline, 1 McCord L. (S. Car.) 52; State v. Huggins, Harp. L. (S. Car.) 139.

Tennessee. — Cowan v. Murch, 97 Tenn. 590.

Virginia. — Booker v. Young, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 303.

In Williams v. Benet, 35 S. Car. 150, it was said: "If the house consists of one hundred and twenty-four members, and a majority of the house is declared to be a quorum, it is practically the same thing as saying that any sixty-three members of the house shall constitute a quorum; and this is what has been said in the case of State v. Hayne, 8 S. Car. 367."

Where a Statute Requires the Presence of All or a Certain Number a majority is not sufficient. Ex p. Rogers, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 526. See also Rex v. Miller, 6 T. R. 268; Curry v. Claysville Cemetery Assoc., 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 289.

Supreme Court — Whole Body Need Not Be in Existence. — Williams v. Benet, 35 S. Car. 150.

But where a charter required that the mayor and common clerk for the time being and the common council for the time being, or the major part of them, should elect, and the common council was a definite body consisting of thirty-six, it was held that a majority of the whole number must meet to form an elective assembly; and that if the corporation was so reduced as that so many did not remain, no election could be had at all. Rex v. Bellringer, 4 T. R. 810.

Directors — Stockholders. — See the titles OFFICERS AND AGENTS OF PRIVATE CORPORATIONS, vol. 21, p. 871; STOCK; STOCKHOLDERS.

1. One Person. — Sharp v. Dawes, 2 Q. B. D. 26, 46 L. J. Q. B. D. 104.

But in Morrill v. Little Falls Mfg. Co., 53 Minn. 371, it was said: "But this decision is based upon a narrow lexicographical definition of the word 'meeting' as the coming together of two or more persons — a reason that does not commend itself to our judgment."

2. Presiding Officer and Half of the Members of the Assembly. — Somerset v. Smith, 105 Ky. 678; Somerset v. Somerset Banking Co., (Ky. 1900) 60 S. W. Rep. 5; Bybee v. Smith, (Ky. 1901) 61 S. W. Rep. 15; Atty.-Gen. v. Shepard, 62 N. H. 383, 13 Am. St. Rep. 576; Cate v. Martin, 70 N. H. 142; Mills v. Gleason, 11 Wis. 493.

County Auditor — Township Trustees. — In State v. Porter, 113 Ind. 79, it was held that the county auditor, not being a member of the board of trustees, could not be counted in determining whether or not a quorum was present.

3. Disqualification on Account of Interest. — Smith v. Los Angeles Immigration, etc., Assoc., 78 Cal. 289, 12 Am. St. Rep. 53; Curtin v. Salmon River Hydraulic Gold Min., etc., Co., 130 Cal. 345; Jones v. Morrison, 31 Minn. 140; Van Hook v. Somerville Mfg. Co., 5 N. J. Eq. 139; Metropolitan Telephone, etc., Co. v. Domestic Tel., etc., Co., 44 N. J. Eq. 568; Butts v. Wood, 37 N. Y. 317; Copeland v. Johnson Mfg. Co., 47 Hun (N. Y.) 235; San Antonio St. R. Co. v. Adams, 87 Tex. 125, reversing (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 25 S. W. Rep. 639. Compare Buell v. Buckingham, 16 Iowa 284, 85 Am. Dec. 516.

Interested Trustee. — In U. S. Ice, etc., Co. v. Reed, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 2 How. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 253, the court said: "A trustee whose attendance is necessary to make a quorum cannot act upon a claim in his own favor to bind the corporation, and by his presence he thus acted."

A vote of confirmation of an assessment passed at a meeting of a board of trustees consisting of the number of five, in which only four members attended, and in which vote two trustees concurred, the others, being interested, declining to vote, was held not a valid act, although the two trustees who did not vote assented to the vote of their colleagues. Coles v. Williamsburgh, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 661.

De Facto Officers. — It has been held that de facto officers may help to constitute a quorum. Pence v. Frankfort, 101 Ky. 534.

Majority of Members Qualified Sufficient. — See State v. Huggins, Harp. L. (S. Car.) 139.

Judicial Quorum. — See infra, this title, JUDICIAL BODIES.

4. Majority of a Judicial Body Constitutes a Quorum. — Snider v. Rinehart, 18 Colo. 18; Cowan v. Murch, 97 Tenn. 590.

A Judge Who Is Disqualified cannot form one of the number necessary to constitute a quorum. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. McKeen, 149 U. S. 259.

In Gwin v. O'Daniel, 85 Tex. 563, and Austin v. Nalle, 85 Tex. 520, it was held that two members of the Court of Civil Appeals constituted a quorum, although the third might be disqualified.

or decision of the court.¹

IV. COUNTING A QUORUM. — In the absence of any constitutional limitation a legislative body may prescribe the method to be pursued by it to determine the presence of a quorum, and members present, though not voting, may be counted to complete the number necessary for a quorum if such is the method prescribed.²

V. PRESUMPTION OF CONTINUANCE. — Where it appears that a quorum was present at a certain time, and it does not appear that after that time there was an adjournment, it will be presumed that the quorum continued to be present.³

VI. MAJORITY OF QUORUM MAY ACT. — A quorum is, for all legal purposes, as much the body to which it appertains as if every member were present, and when a quorum has met an act of the majority of such quorum is an act of the body itself.⁴ But the will of the majority must be expressed at a regular

In Nephi Irrigation Co. v. Jenkins, 8 Utah 452, it was held that the justice who tried a case in the court below might sit in the Supreme Court for the purpose of making a quorum, although the statute provided that no justice should act as a member of the Supreme Court in any action appealed from his decision in the court below.

The Constitution of South Carolina provided that the Supreme Court should consist of a chief justice and two associate justices, any two of whom should constitute a quorum. Where the chief justice was dead and one of the associate justices was disqualified on account of interest, it was held that an acting justice appointed by the governor with the remaining associate justice would constitute a quorum of the court. Williams v. Benet, 35 S. Car. 150; Aultman v. Utsey, 35 S. Car. 596. See also Sullivan v. Speights, 14 S. Car. 358.

1. A Quorum of a Judicial Body Can Exercise the Functions of That Body. — Snider v. Rinehart, 18 Colo. 18; McFarland v. Cray, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 297; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Davidson County Ct. 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 637, 62 Am. Dec. 424. And see infra, this title, Majority of Quorum May Act.

2. Counting a Quorum. — U. S. v. Ballin, 144 U. S. 1; Atty.-Gen. v. Shepard, 62 N. H. 383, 13 Am. St. Rep. 576; State v. Green, 37 Ohio St. 227. See also Ex p. Rogers, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 526; State v. Vanosdal, 131 Ind. 388.

But Where the Legislature Has Not Adopted the Rule allowing the speaker to count members present and not voting to make a quorum, the speaker has no power. Stanford v. Ellington, 117 N. Car. 158, 53 Am. St. Rep. 580. See also U. S. v. Ballin, 144 U. S. 1.

Absent Members. — In Dingwall v. Detroit, 82 Mich. 568, the court declared illegal the action taken by a portion of the common council of the city of Detroit in counting, for the purpose of completing a quorum, absent members who had left the meeting and the council chamber for the purpose of breaking the quorum.

3. Presumption of Continuance. — Stanford v. Ellington, 117 N. Car. 161, 53 Am. St. Rep. 580.

meeting at which all of the members might have been present.¹ And where by statute a majority of all the members is required for action, a majority of a quorum, if less than a majority of the whole number of the members of the body, will be insufficient.² A legislative or other collective body cannot act without the presence of a quorum,³ but less than a quorum may adjourn.⁴

Members Present and Refusing to Vote. — When a part of the members present refuse to vote at all, a vote may be legally decided by a majority of those actually voting, though they do not constitute a majority of the whole number present. This rule rests upon the principle that members present and not voting will be deemed to assent to the action of those who do vote.⁵

Where a municipal charter provided that a majority should be required to form a quorum, and a rule of proceeding was adopted by the council that no ordinance should be put on its third reading at the same meeting at which it was first read, except by unanimous consent of the council, the court construed this rule to mean unanimous consent of all the members present when the third reading was asked, whether a bare majority or more. Atkins v. Phillips, 26 Fla. 281, 34 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 195.

By Statute a Vote of Two-thirds of a City Council Was Necessary to enact certain measures. It was held that by this was meant two-thirds of a quorum and not two-thirds of the whole number of members elected. Warnock v. Lafayette, 4 La. Ann. 419. See also Southworth v. Palmyra, etc., R. Co., 2 Mich. 287; Green v. Weller, 32 Miss. 650; State v. McBride, 4 Mo. 303, 29 Am. Dec. 636. *Compare Logansport v. Delegation of Power for Private Purposes to Two or More.—Where there is a delegation of authority to two or more persons for private purposes it must be executed by all to be effectual, unless it should appear that it was intended that a majority should act.¹

Boards, Committees, Commissions, Etc.—It has been held, where statutes constitute a board of commissioners or other officers to decide any matter, but make no provision that a majority shall constitute a quorum, that all must be present to hear and consult, though a majority may decide.² Of course, when a statute under which the commission or committee acts requires the presence or concurrence of all, the concurrence of a majority is not sufficient.³ Where a statute constitutes a certain number of the members of a commission a quorum, it has been held that a rule of the commission requiring a larger number to constitute a quorum was void.⁴

QUOTA.—The proportion or share of a common burden which belongs to each of several persons or places.⁵

QUOTE.—To quote is to name, as the price of stock, produce, etc.; to name the current price of.⁶

Silent Members Not Presumed to Acquiesce.—In State v. Fagan, 42 Conn. 32, it was held, where a statute required "a majority vote of the qualified members present," that a majority of all actually voting was not sufficient if less than a majority of the qualified members was present.

Where by statute a majority of the whole number of voters is required, a minority is insufficient where the majority refuses to act. Gosling v. Veley, 4 H. L. Cas. 679, reversing 7 Q. B. 406, 53 E. C. L. 406.

Blank Votes.—And in Lawrence v. Ingersoll, 88 Tenn. 52, 17 Am. St. Rep. 870, the court, in a well-considered opinion, held that when an election is to be made by a select and definite number of electors, a majority of those actually present must vote to elect; and in order to the determination of the number constituting a majority of those present, members casting blank votes must be counted present and not voting. See also Com. v. Wickersham, 66 Pa. St. 134; People v. Conklin, 7 Hun (N. Y.) 188.

Majority of a Quorum of Members Elected and Voting.—A rule had been adopted by a city council which read as follows: "A majority of a quorum of members elected and voting shall be necessary to choose any officer elected by this board." In construing this provision the court said: "We are of the opinion that the meaning of it is that a 'quorum of the members elected' should vote, and that a majority of that quorum could elect when the quorum was 'voting.'" I. DEFINITION AND SCOPE OF TITLE — Definition. — In its broadest sense quo warranto may be defined as a legal proceeding to determine the right to an office or franchise, and to oust the defendant therefrom if his title is found to be fatally defective.¹

Scope of Title. — This article is confined to a statement of the principles governing the remedy and to an enumeration of the cases where it is an appropriate or exclusive remedy. The detailed discussion of the right to an office, franchise, or privilege under particular statutes or circumstances is relegated to the special titles in this work dealing with such subjects.²

II. NATURE AND ORIGIN OF REMEDY — 1. Ancient Writ of Quo Warranto. — Originally at common law the writ of quo warranto was a writ in the nature of a writ of right for the crown against the usurper of an office or franchise, whereby the authority of the usurper was inquired into and the right determined. It commanded the respondent to show by what authority — quo warranto — he assumed to exercise the office of franchise, having never had any grant of it or having forfeited it by neglect or abuse.³ The writ is a very ancient one. The earliest instance of its use appearing of record is said to have been in 1198, during the reign of Richard I.⁴ The writ was much abused and became a powerful instrument in aid of the encroachments of the royal prerogative.⁵ These abuses were checked and the use of the writ regulated by the statutes of quo warranto enacted during the reign of Edward I.⁶

2. Information in Nature of Quo Warranto. — At an early day, the time of which cannot be precisely determined,¹ the writ of quo warranto fell into disuse and its place was taken by an information in the nature of quo warranto, which is now the exclusive remedy in England and in most of the states of the Union.² In the United States the terms "quo warranto" and "information in the nature of quo warranto" are generally, but not always, used as wholly synonymous terms.³ The information lies in all cases where formerly the writ would have issued,⁴ and, in the absence of constitutional or statutory provisions, in no other cases.⁵

3. Modern Statutory Regulations and Substitutes. — In the absence of statutory provisions the common-law remedy by information in the nature of quo warranto is the proper remedy in appropriate cases.⁶ But statutory regulations exist very generally in the several states.⁷ In some states an ordinary civil action serves the purpose of the former writ of information,⁸ both the writ and the information being sometimes expressly abolished.¹ In other states special statutory proceedings are provided to serve the same purpose.² These various statutory provisions amount simply to changes in the form of the remedy. The remedy remains substantially in fact, as it is frequently called in name, quo warranto, and except as modified by statute is governed by common-law principles.³ Quo warranto statutes are remedial, and are to be construed and administered so as to advance the remedy and render it effectual.⁴

4. Extraordinary Prerogative Character. — Originally both the writ and the information were exclusively prerogative remedies, available only to redress or punish encroachments upon the prerogative of the crown, and issued only at the instance of the crown.⁵ This prerogative character is still retained to the extent that the proceedings are in the name of the state or sovereign, and are limited to cases where, in theory at least, the rights of the public are involved. The remedy is not available for the trial of purely private rights.⁶

any municipal office or franchise in the kingdom.¹ This statute is the origin of the use of the information as a means of determining civil rights between parties.² It forms the basis of the remedy in England and the United States except where the proceedings have been established or modified by statute.³

5. Civil or Criminal Character.—The Writ of Quo Warranto, as distinguished from the information, was strictly a civil remedy, prosecuted for the benefit of the king, to seize a franchise or oust a usurper.⁴

The Information in the Nature of Quo Warranto was originally a criminal proceeding in which the usurpation of an office or franchise was punished as a criminal offense.⁵ But after the proceeding by information supplanted the writ of quo warranto, the information came to be treated as a civil proceeding in everything except form, a merely nominal fine or none at all being imposed, and such has always been its character in most, if not all, the states of the Union,⁶ though in some cases, while used only as a civil remedy, it has been so far treated as criminal in form as to require matters of pleading and jurisdiction to be governed accordingly.⁷ Constitutional provisions prohibiting the prosecution of criminal offenses otherwise than by indictment do not inhibit informations in the nature of quo warranto,¹ unless it should be attempted to impose a substantial fine or inflict some other punishment, in which case the information would be a real criminal prosecution.² As already stated, in some states an ordinary civil action has been substituted for the writ or information, thus obviating the anomaly of using the form of a criminal proceeding to enforce a civil right.³

6. Action or Special Proceeding. — In the absence of statutory provision to that effect, an information in the nature of quo warranto is not an action or "a civil action" within the meaning of modern practice codes or constitutional provisions.⁴ The proceeding is special and sui juris.⁵ But statutes exist in some states under which the remedy is considered a civil action.⁶

Equity Jurisdiction under Statute. — In Tennessee it was held at an early day that neither the ancient writ of quo warranto nor the information in the nature thereof was ever in force, and the remedies obtainable under those proceedings are to be sought by a bill in equity under statutory provision, said to be a bill in the nature of quo warranto. State v. Turk, Mart. & Y. (Tenn.) 287; Hyde v. Trewwhitt, 7 Coldw. (Tenn.) 62; State v. McConnell, 3 Lea (Tenn.) 335; Atty.-Gen. v. Leaf, 9 Humph. (Tenn.) 755; Boring v. Griffith, 1 Heisk. (Tenn.) 456; State v. Merchants Ins., etc., Co., 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 252.

In Maine, under the statute of 1880, c. 198, a speedy remedy was provided to enable parties duly elected to an office, but not declared to be so elected, to contest their rights before a judicial tribunal by bill in the place of quo warranto and mandamus. Prince v. Skillin, 71 Me. 361, 36 Am. Rep. 325.

information in the nature of quo warranto, or the statutory substitute therefor, lies where a person has usurped an office or franchise, or where having once lawfully held such office or franchise he has forfeited it by misuser or non-user.¹ Where the right to an office or franchise is not involved, quo warranto is not an appropriate remedy.²

2. Possession and User. — Quo warranto will not lie unless there is an actual wrongful possession and user by the respondent of the office or franchise in question. A mere claim of right is not enough,³ unless the statute has expressly extended the remedy to such cases.⁴ The proceeding will not lie where the office is vacant.⁵ But where there has once been possession and user of an office, a mere subsequent abandonment, without resignation, does not render the office vacant in such a sense as to oust the remedy by quo warranto.⁶ The remedy will not lie to determine the title to an office before commencement of the term of office.⁷ What constitutes possession and user of an office or franchise has been elsewhere fully considered.⁸

3. Exclusiveness of Remedy. — In the absence of statute creating concurrent remedies,⁹ quo warranto is the exclusive remedy in cases where it is appropriate.¹⁰ Thus the right to an office or franchise cannot be collaterally attacked, but must be directly attacked, if at all, by proceedings in quo warranto.¹¹

4. Leave of Court — a. WRIT OF QUO WARRANTO. — At common law, as has been seen,¹² the writ of quo warranto was a writ of right for the crown and might be sued out by the attorney-general ex officio without leave of court,¹ and where the writ as distinguished from the information is still recognized as an appropriate form of proceeding,² no leave of court is necessary, and the remedy may be claimed as of right in appropriate cases.³

b. INFORMATIONS IN NATURE OF QUO WARRANTO.—The attorney-general has always had the right, ex officio, to file and prosecute an information in the nature of quo warranto, on behalf of the crown or public, without leave of court, and such is still the general rule.⁴ But the statute of Anne, which first authorized informations in the nature of quo warranto to be filed at the relation of private persons, required leave of court as a condition precedent to the right of a private relator to file such information.⁵ This practice has been preserved, and it is still the general rule that leave of court is necessary in the case of informations by a private relator;⁶ but leave may be necessary where the attorney-general merely allows private counsel to use his name, as

The former restrains the clerk of the crown in this court from exhibiting or filing informations without leave of the court in cases where all the king's subjects might, before the making of that act, have made use of his name without such leave. The latter lets in everybody who desires it, to make use of his name in prosecuting usurpers of franchises, whereas before no subject could have done so. But it provides that these informations (as well as those for misdemeanors) must be under the leave and discretion of the court. Therefore, the court ought not to give such leave without sufficient reason." Per Wilmot, J., in Rex v. Trelawney, 3 Burr. 1615.

In State v. Stewart, 32 Mo. 379, it was said: "There are in England three distinct classes of informations in the nature of a quo warranto: first, those filed by the attorney-general without leave of the court and without any relators; second, those filed with the leave of the court, by the clerk of the crown, by virtue of his common-law power; and third, informations by the clerk of the crown on the relation of some one, and by leave of the court, under the statute of 9 Anne, c. 20."

is sometimes done, in order to procure the writ.¹ Want of prior formal leave may be waived by acquiescence, and does not necessarily constitute reversible error.²

c. MODERN STATUTORY PROCEEDINGS. — The necessity of prior leave of court under modern statutory regulations and forms of proceeding depends, of course, upon the terms of the statute in force.³ But the general rule seems to be substantially the same as at common law, after the statute of Anne. That is to say, proceedings by the attorney-general ex officio, in behalf of the public, may be brought without leave of court, while proceedings at the instance of private persons to try the right as between party and party cannot be prosecuted without leave of court.⁴ Under some statutes, however, a private relator may prosecute the proceeding without leave of court.⁵

5. Discretion of Court — a. STATEMENT OF RULE. — In cases where prior leave of court is necessary, that is, where the proceedings are at the relation of a private person and not by the attorney-general ex officio, the granting or withholding of leave is a matter resting within the sound discretion of the court.⁶ Where leave is not necessary, the court has no discretion, but must enforce the law applicable to the case.¹ In any case, the court ought not to arbitrarily refuse leave.²

b. CONSIDERATIONS AFFECTING EXERCISE OF DISCRETION. — Formerly leave was granted to file an information almost as a matter of course, but subsequently the rule became established that leave should be granted with caution, and with a view to all the circumstances of the case.³ The applicant must make some affirmative showing why leave should be granted,⁴ and the respondent may be heard by counter-affidavits.⁵ The existence of legal defects in the title of the respondent is not conclusive that leave must be granted,⁶ and a fortiori mere irregularities not affecting the result are not sufficient to require the granting of leave.⁷ Where there is a want of probable cause, leave may be refused.⁸ But ordinarily the merits of the application should not be considered in advance of the hearing, other than to ascertain whether or not there is reasonable ground for investigating further.⁹ Where the facts are disputed, or involve new and doubtful questions of law, leave should ordinarily be granted;¹⁰ though where a question of law is decisive, and such question can be conveniently determined upon the application for leave, it is proper for the court to decide the question at that stage of the case, and refuse leave upon a decision of the legal question in favor of the respondent.¹¹ The interests of the public and innocent parties may be considered, and where the proceeding would result in injury or inconvenience without any corresponding benefit, and no private right of the relator is involved, leave may properly be refused.¹² The importance of the office or interests affected

That the application against a member of a corporation is based on grounds affecting his individual title in common with that of every other member of the corporation, and that the effect will be to dissolve the corporation, is may be considered.¹ The shortness of the term of office, or the fact that it is nearly expired, may be considered ground for refusing leave.² Another adequate remedy is sufficient ground for refusing leave.³ The motives of the relator and the relations of the parties to the matter in controversy may be considered.⁴ Where the relator is without interest in the controversy, the court may properly refuse leave.⁵ It is no objection that the proceeding is a friendly one brought for the purpose of enabling the respondent to disclaim.⁶ Where the remedy would be unavailing and useless, leave may be denied.⁷ A renewed application will be refused where the effect of granting it will be to raise questions once decided.⁸

c. EXHAUSTION OF DISCRETION. — Where leave is improvidently granted, the court may, upon the hearing, refuse relief upon the same grounds for which it might have refused leave to file the information.⁹ But there are cases holding that where the court allows an information to be filed, its discretion is exhausted, and the case must then be determined strictly according to law. The court has no discretion to dispense with the law after the information has been filed.¹⁰ If, however, leave has been improvidently granted, the court may vacate the order at any time during the term at which it was granted.¹¹

6. Discretion of Prosecuting Officer. — At common law and in cases not governed by statute, the court has no authority to direct the filing of an information, and the matter is wholly within the discretion of the attorney-general or other proper prosecuting officer,¹² except, perhaps, in cases where not of itself and standing alone, as a proposition of law or as a settled point of practice, a ground for refusing leave to file an information. State v. Tolan, 33 N. J. L. 199.

English Practice — Master of Crown Office. — In Goddard v. Smithett, 3 Gray (Mass.) 116, the court explained the practice of the Court of such discretion has been clearly abused.¹ It has been said that the court will not even aid him by its advice and directions,² although a contrary view has been taken.³ But when a private citizen is the relator, the attorney-general or other public officer cannot prevent the court from assuming jurisdiction and granting leave to file the information by refusing to consent to the use of his name,⁴ except where by statute his consent to the filing of the information is necessary.⁵ But great weight will be given to the refusal of the attorney-general where no private interest of the relator is involved.⁶ It is sufficient if the attorney-general's consent is obtained at any time before trial.⁷ Acting as an attorney in the case is sufficient to show consent.⁸ Under some statutes, a prior application to the prosecuting officer, and a refusal by him to file the information, are necessary to enable a private relator to do so.⁹

7. Limitation and Laches.—In the absence of a statute there is no limitation as to the time within which the attorney-general may file an information on behalf of the people.¹⁰ A statute applicable to criminal prosecutions under penal laws does not apply to quo warranto proceedings, since, as has been seen,¹¹ such proceedings are civil and not criminal in character.¹² But the general statute of limitations has been held to apply to a proceeding by quo warranto to enforce private rights,¹³ though it does not apply to proceedings prosecuted by the state.¹⁴ In some jurisdictions there are special statutes of limitation applicable to quo warranto proceedings.¹⁵ Where leave of court

King's or Queen's Bench in England in directing the master of the crown office to file an information in the nature of a quo warranto on application of a private person. The court there said: "But there being no corresponding office or officer in this commonwealth, * * * no corresponding practice could prevail here."

Under Special Statutory Provisions it has been held that the state's officer may be directed by the general assembly, the governor, or the court to institute quo warranto proceedings. is necessary, and the court has a discretion,¹ lapse of time and laches may be sufficient ground for withholding leave to file the information.² The doctrine of laches has been applied even against the state,³ though some courts refuse to extend the doctrine to such cases.⁴

8. Acquiescence and Estoppel.—Acquiescence by the relator, or participation by him in the irregularities complained of, is sufficient to estop him from maintaining quo warranto proceedings based upon such irregularities.⁵ But acquiescence by the relator or other persons interested does not operate to estop the state.⁶ Even the state by recognition of a corporation may be estopped to question its existence by quo warranto.⁷

sufficient ground for refusing leave to file an information that there is another adequate remedy.¹ But if such other remedy is not adequate, it will not oust the remedy by quo warranto.²

b. CONCURRENT AND EXCLUSIVE REMEDIES—(1) Constitutional and Statutory Remedies.—Where the jurisdiction in quo warranto rests upon constitutional provisions it cannot be taken away or impaired by statutes providing other forms of remedies for cases where quo warranto is an appropriate remedy,³ except where the statutory remedy is created in pursuance of constitutional provisions.⁴ In many states the jurisdiction of the supreme or other appellate court in quo warranto is conferred by the constitution, while that of other courts rests upon statute. In such states a statutory remedy may not be exclusive in the supreme or appellate court, but may be exclusive in other courts.⁵ Where no constitutional jurisdiction is involved, it is a question of statutory construction in each case whether the remedies are concurrent or exclusive,⁶ and statutory remedies have been held to be exclusive,⁷ or not exclusive,⁸ according to the intent of the statute as construed by the court. It has been held that a statutory remedy is not exclusive unless the remedy by quo warranto is expressly or by necessary implication taken away.⁹ So a statute creating merely a private remedy does not affect the remedy of the state by quo warranto to oust a usurper of its offices or franchises.¹⁰ Where a new right, or the means of acquiring it, and an adequate remedy for its invasion are provided by the same statute, parties injured are confined to the statutory remedy,¹ but this rule does not apply to proceedings on behalf of the state.²

(2) Election Contest. — The cases in the different states are conflicting upon the question whether a statutory remedy for the contest of an election is the exclusive remedy in such cases, or merely cumulative and alternative to the remedy by quo warranto.³ Much of this apparent conflict is undoubtedly due to differences in the provisions and constructions of the statutes and constitutions involved.⁴ An election contest has been held to be the exclusive remedy for the determination of the particular questions for the trial of which it was created, as the number and legality of votes cast at an election,⁵ while quo warranto will lie to determine questions not triable in an election contest.⁶ Where an election contest will not remove the incumbent from office, quo warranto will lie, as the other remedy is not adequate,⁷ but a statutory proceeding by which the incumbent can be ousted and the contestant installed is a more adequate remedy than quo warranto.⁸ In several states it has been held that a proceeding in quo warranto is not an "election contest," the object and effect of the two proceedings being different.⁹ Under some statutes the view has been taken that an election contest is the exclusive remedy available to the rival candidates, but that the state may test the title of an officer by quo warranto,¹⁰ though there is also authority for the view that even the state is confined to the remedy by election contest.¹¹

(3) Bodies Deciding Qualifications of Their Own Members. — Statutes providing that a town or city council shall have the power to decide the election and qualifications of its own members have been held not to deprive the courts of jurisdiction to determine the same question in quo warranto,¹² and the action of such board is not conclusive in quo warranto proceedings.¹ In other cases the jurisdiction of the city council or board is deemed exclusive upon the questions which it is authorized to determine,² and such determination is final.³ The jurisdiction of state legislative bodies in election contests affecting their own members has universally been held exclusive,⁴ but this rule does not apply to municipal bodies, and the reasoning of the rule in one class of cases will not apply in the other.⁵

10. Public or Private Rights. — Quo warranto is not the proper remedy for the trial of exclusively private rights. It is available only where the public, in theory at least, have some interest,⁶ though such public interest is not always very marked or apparent.⁷ Originally, as has been seen, both the writ and the information were purely prerogative remedies available only to the crown,⁸ but by the statute of Anne, and analogous statutes existing in all the United States, the remedy has been extended and made available to private persons specially interested in the public question to try the right as between party and party.⁹

2. Appellate Courts. — In many of the states, by constitutional or statutory provisions, the appellate courts or courts of last resort are vested with original jurisdiction in quo warranto proceedings.⁴ Where such jurisdiction is conferred by the constitution, it is immaterial that the legislature has made no provision regulating the procedure, and in such case the court will proceed according to the course of the common law.⁵ Such grant of jurisdiction is not exclusive, and the legislature may confer concurrent original jurisdiction upon inferior courts.⁶ In cases of concurrent jurisdiction, the supreme or appellate court, in its discretion, will usually decline to entertain the proceedings where there is a complete and adequate remedy in some other court, and no special reason appears why the proceedings should be taken in the first instance in the appellate court,¹ and this rule is especially applicable where the interests of only a private relator, and not of the whole community, are involved.² In the absence of statutory or constitutional provisions, a court of purely appellate jurisdiction has no original jurisdiction in quo warranto.³ Under a grant of merely supervisory jurisdiction, an appellate court has no original jurisdiction in quo warranto, since that remedy is not adapted to control or supervise.⁴

the terms of the statute conferring it.¹ For the purpose of statutes regulating jurisdiction, quo warranto proceedings are civil and not criminal.² In the absence of any general or special law upon the subject, courts of general original common-law jurisdiction have jurisdiction in quo warranto.³

4. State or Federal Courts. — A state court has no jurisdiction of quo warranto in the name of the state to determine the right to an office or franchise under the Constitution and laws of the United States.⁴ But the mere fact that the franchise or privilege usurped or misused affects interstate commerce does not oust the state courts of jurisdiction.⁵

5. Removal of Causes. — Quo warranto proceedings to try a civil right are suits of a civil nature within the Removal Acts, and are subject to removal as any other civil actions.⁶

6. Distinction Between Writ and Information in Grant of Jurisdiction. — The term "writ of quo warranto" as used in constitutional grants of jurisdiction to particular courts is held to include informations in the nature of quo warranto,⁷ or other statutory substitutes for the common-law remedy,⁸ upon the ground that at the time of the adoption of such constitutional provisions the ancient and technical writ had long been obsolete, and it had become

1. Statutory Limitation. — See State v. Lingo, 26 Mo. 496.

Thus in some states the jurisdiction of Circuit Courts does not extend to state offices. Secord v. Foutch, 44 Mich. 90; Field v. Com., 32 Pa. St. 478; Leib v. Com., 9 Watts (Pa.) 200.

2. State v. Lingo, 26 Mo. 496. But see People v. Gillespie, 1 Cal. 344. See generally supra, this title, Nature and Origin of Remedy—Civil or Criminal Character.

3. In Absence of Special Statute. — State v. Stewart, 6 Houst. (Del.) 371; Snowball v. People, 147 Ill. 265; State v. Lobsinger, 7 Mo. App. 106; Kane v. People, 4 Neb. 509; People v. Hall, 80 N. Y. 117. See State v. Portage City Water Co., 107 Wis. 447. See also Lindsey v. Atty.-Gen., 33 Miss. 508.

4. Officer of National Bank. — In State v. Curtis, 35 Conn. 374, 95 Am. Dec. 263, it was held that an information in the nature of quo warranto will not lie in a state court to try the right to the office of director in a bank organized under the national currency act.

Presidential Electors. — State v. Bowen, 8 S. Car. 400, holding that an information cannot be maintained in the name of the state to determine the title of an elector of president and vice-president of the United States, and that the objection could be raised by a plea to the jurisdiction of the state court. Compare State v. Bowen, 8 S. Car. 382.

The question involved in these cases seems to have been really a question as to the proper party plaintiff.

5. Interstate Commerce Affected. — State v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co., 47 Ohio St. 130.

Generally as to the respective state and federal jurisdiction in matters affecting interstate commerce, see the title INTERSTATE COMMERCE, vol. 17, p. 34.

Suits Arising under Laws of United States. — Proceedings by a state against a corporation under its own laws, in the nature of quo warranto for the abandonment, relinquishment, and surrender of its powers to another corporation with which it has been consolidated under a law of the United States, and proceedings against the directors of said consolidated company for usurping the powers of such state corporation are, when in the form of civil actions, suits arising under the laws of the United States within the meaning of the acts regulating the removal of causes. *Ames v. customary to use the expression "writ of quo warranto" as synonymous with, and a shorter form of expression for, "information in the nature of quo warranto."¹ A few early cases took the view that such provisions restored the ancient remedy by writ and did not confer jurisdiction of an information.²

7. Statutory Impairment of Constitutional Jurisdiction. — Where jurisdiction in quo warranto is conferred by constitutional provision, such jurisdiction cannot be in any way impaired or altered by statutory provision.³ Thus, where the jurisdiction is vested in the court, it cannot be transferred to a single justice of the court.⁴ So, as has been seen, the creation of new statutory remedies does not oust the constitutional remedy by quo warranto.⁵

8. Amount in Controversy. — When the jurisdiction of a court depends upon the amount in controversy, such court has jurisdiction of informations in the nature of a quo warranto, where the value of the office, measured by the salary or emoluments thereof, is within such jurisdictional amount.⁶

V. PARTIES — 1. Who May Maintain Proceedings — a. STATE OR SOVEREIGN. — At common law quo warranto proceedings must be prosecuted in the name of the state or sovereign, as the writ only lies in cases affecting public rights,⁷ and this is still the rule where the purpose of the proceeding is to inquire into a right or to redress a wrong concerning the state.⁸ In such cases the attorney-general or other public prosecuting officer is the proper person to institute the proceedings and be named as relator.¹ In proceedings by the state in matters affecting only public rights, no relator is necessary,² but the unnecessary insertion of a relator is immaterial.³

b. PRIVATE INDIVIDUALS — RELATORS — (1) General Rules. — At common law, prior to the statute of Anne, a private individual could not, without the intervention of the attorney-general or other public prosecutor, either as of right, or by leave of court, file an information in the nature of quo warranto, and in the absence of statute changing the rule this is still the law.⁴ But recognizing that individuals as well as the public at large may be interested in the usurpation of public offices or franchises, the statute of Anne provided that in certain cases informations might be filed upon the relation of any person interested,⁵ leave of court to do so having been first obtained,⁶ and similar statutes are very generally in force throughout the United States.⁷ In most states, although a private individual may appear as a relator, the proceedings must still be brought in the name of the state, as, in theory at least, the interests of the state are involved.⁸ In such cases both the state

When the information in the nature of quo warranto took the place of the ancient writ, it became the practice of the officers of the crown to file informations in their own discretion upon the applications of private persons, but the latter were not named as relators in the proceedings. and the relator may be real parties in interest.¹ In a few states a person claiming a public office is authorized to bring an action in his own name against the incumbent to determine the right.² But in the absence of express statutory authority a private person has no right to proceed in his own name without the interposition of the proper state officer.³ In some jurisdictions the relator, having an interest, may be joined with the state as a complainant.⁴

(2) Interest of Relator. — A private person is not entitled to prosecute the proceeding unless he has a special interest in the matter in controversy.⁵ Statutes permitting relators to institute proceedings in the name of the state or to bring private actions in their own names give no right of private action in matters which concern the public only, and in which the relator is not specially interested, unless by positive and express provision the remedy is extended to such cases.⁶ The private interest of the relator must be one in maintain the proceedings upon any ground which affects his own title equally with that of the defendant, as where both claim under a void election or an unconstitutional statute,¹ unless he has some other interest sufficient to maintain the proceeding.² Where the title of the claimant is defective, and he has no other interest, he cannot maintain the proceedings.³ The claimant need not qualify or offer to qualify before commencing the proceeding, as in many cases this would be impossible or useless until the incumbent is ousted.⁴

A Defeated Candidate, though not himself claiming the office, has sufficient interest to maintain quo warranto to set aside the result of an election and have the office declared vacant.⁵

A Private Individual cannot maintain quo warranto to try the right of the incumbent to a public office,⁶ unless he himself claims to be entitled to the office,⁷ or unless he has some other special interest therein, sufficient to maintain the proceedings.⁸ Under some statutes a private relator cannot maintain the proceeding without showing a demand upon the prosecuting officer to proceed and a refusal upon his part to do so.⁹

Any Citizen and Taxpayer of a Municipal Corporation may maintain the proceeding to try the title to an office under the municipality and to oust an unlawful incumbent.¹⁰ This has been held in regard to the office of alderman, or member of the common council or municipal assembly,¹ mayor,² county superintendent of the poor,³ town commissioner,⁴ tax collector,⁵ city surveyor,⁶ street inspector,⁷ or against persons charged with usurping the functions of a board of assessment and revision of city taxes.⁸ It has been held in England that a Burgess is a good relator in an information against a town councilor⁹ or a town clerk.¹⁰ A private relator cannot maintain quo warranto to oust an officer of a de facto municipal corporation upon the ground that the corporation has no legal existence, since that question can be raised only by the state acting through the public prosecutor.¹¹ A further objection to such a proceeding is that quo warranto against an officer of a municipality admits the legal existence of the corporation.¹² But a contrary view has been sometimes taken.¹³

Members of a Board of public officers may maintain quo warranto against other persons who claim to be members or officers of the board.¹⁴

The Mayor of a City has been held not entitled to maintain the proceeding against one claiming the office of city councilman, because not sufficiently interested therein.¹⁵

A Justice of the Peace is a proper relator in case of usurpation of the office of alderman of the same ward.¹⁶

(2) Public or Municipal Corporations. — As a general rule, quo warranto to determine the legal existence of a municipal corporation can be maintained only by the state and not by a private relator.¹ A landowner may maintain quo warranto to try the legality of the organization of a municipal corporation within the limits of which his land has been included, or to try the validity of proceedings extending the corporate limits so as to include his land.²

(3) Private Corporations. — The right to be a corporation is a franchise held by grant from the state, and when the object of the proceedings is to destroy the corporation and not merely to correct an abuse, the state and not a private relator is the proper moving party.³ But the information may be filed on the relation of a private person against an officer of a corporation on grounds affecting his individual title, although the same objections may apply to the title of every other officer and member of the corporation, and the application is incidentally, in effect, against the whole corporation.¹ In a few jurisdictions private relators have been permitted to maintain proceedings for the dissolution of a corporation.²

(4) Officers of Private Corporations. — Quo warranto proceedings to try the right to a corporate office may be brought by the state through its designated officers,³ or, under the statutes of most states, by stockholders⁴ or directors.⁵ One without interest cannot maintain the proceeding.⁶ A claimant to the office has sufficient interest to maintain the proceeding.⁷ Acquiescence or estoppel may bar a particular relator.⁸

(5) Franchises. — The state through its designated officers may maintain quo warranto to try the right to a franchise,⁹ and by statute persons specially interested may maintain the proceeding as relators or otherwise.¹⁰ In the case of a federal franchise the proceedings must be brought in the name of the United States.¹¹

persons whom it is sought to oust from the office or franchise in question.¹ No other person is a necessary or proper party defendant,² certainly not persons who have no interest in the proceedings and against whom no relief is sought.³ But the court will protect the rights of third persons.⁴ The joinder of parties is a question of procedure, beyond the scope of this article.⁵

b. PUBLIC OR MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS. — It is sometimes held that quo warranto proceedings to oust a de facto public or municipal corporation from its corporate franchise may be brought directly against the corporation in its corporate name.⁶ But the better opinion seems to be that where the proceedings are based upon an original lack of authority the proceedings must be against the individuals who unlawfully assume to be a municipal corporation, while in cases of forfeiture, or the usurpation of particular franchises, the proceedings should be against the corporation as such.⁷ This is the rule as to private corporations, and there seems to be no reason for any distinction.⁸ Sometimes it has been held that the question of corporate existence could be tried in proceedings against the officers of the municipality.⁹ But in the absence of statutory authority for such a proceeding, while corporate existence may be determined as an incident to the trial of the right to exercise a municipal office, the judgment is not binding upon the corporation.¹⁰ Quo warranto to test the right of a legal municipality to exercise jurisdiction over certain territory, as in cases of an attempted extension of corporate limits, may be brought directly against the municipality,¹ but when the right to exercise jurisdiction over territory depends upon the legality of an organization as a municipal corporation, the individuals assuming jurisdiction are the proper defendants according to the usual rule already stated.²

c. PRIVATE CORPORATIONS. — It is usually held that quo warranto proceedings to oust from a corporate franchise must be brought against the individuals charged with the unlawful user of the franchise, instead of against the corporation,³ and it is said that the effect of bringing the proceedings against the corporation in its corporate name is to admit the corporate existence.⁴ This rule seems correct in principle where the exercise of corporate franchises is wholly unauthorized from the beginning. Where, however, there was originally a valid corporate organization, and it is sought to enforce a forfeiture, or where it is sought merely to oust a corporation from the exercise of particular franchises unlawfully assumed, the proceedings must be against the corporation and not merely against its officers, agents, or stockholders.⁵

Proceedings to test the right of a foreign corporation to do business within the state must be brought directly against the corporation which is a necessary party.¹

VI. PROPER OFFICER TO PROSECUTE — 1. In General. — Quo warranto should be prosecuted by the law officer who represents the sovereign from whom the franchise or office originates.² The right of particular officers to prosecute is sometimes rested upon the common-law powers of such officers,³ but usually the matter is regulated by express statutory or constitutional provisions, the attorney-general or the attorney for the county being designated as the proper officer to prosecute.⁴ Such express provisions are exclusive,⁵ though, of course, a statute cannot take away the power to prosecute if conferred by the constitution.⁶

2. Particular Officers. — Usually where the proceeding is on behalf of the state at large, and in a matter which concerns the state at large, the attorney-general is the proper prosecuting officer,⁷ as in such proceedings instituted statutory regulations as to form where the proceeding is really by and in behalf of the state and not merely formally so.¹ But where an original right in the respondent is conceded or proved the burden of showing a forfeiture is upon the relator or the state,² and the burden of showing facts in excuse or avoidance of the forfeiture is upon the respondent.³ In proceedings in behalf of a private relator, under statutes which permit his claim to be tried in such proceeding the burden is upon the relator to show a good title in himself even though the proceeding is, in form, prosecuted in behalf of the state,⁴ though the burden may be shifted as in other cases by the state of the pleadings.⁵ In such case the rights of three parties are involved in the decision, viz., the relator, the respondent, and the public, and the court may omit the respondent if found not entitled to the office, without necessarily determining that the relator is entitled. The burden is upon each party to establish his own title.⁶

proceedings had upon the writ did not contemplate a fine or punishment, but merely judgment of ouster or seizure of the franchise usurped.¹

In the United States the courts are often invested with the power to inflict a fine upon judgment of ouster,² though in the absence of statute the court has no such power.³ Where the defendant has acted in good faith no fine will be imposed,⁴ or at most merely a nominal fine.⁵ The imposition of a fine is in the discretion of the court.⁶

3. Damages. — Some statutes authorize a recovery in the same proceeding, against the defendant, of the damages sustained by the person entitled to the office.⁷ In the absence of such a statute any claim for damages must be asserted in a separate action.⁸

4. Operation and Effect. — A judgment of ouster does not destroy the franchise in question, but merely ousts the respondent from its enjoyment, and leaves the franchise to be held by the state or such person as has the title thereto.⁹ There is a distinction between a judgment of ouster and of seizure in the case of franchises.¹⁰ In quo warranto to try title to office, a judgment of ouster divests the person ousted of all official authority and completely

In Reg. v. Tyrrell, 11 Mod. 235, judgment was given that the defendant should be ousted of his office, but pardoning the fine.

A Mere Judgment of Forfeiture does not ipso facto work a dissolution of the corporation, but there must be execution for the seizure of the franchises before the penalties of forfeiture take place. Nevitt v. Port Gibson Bank, 6 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 514; People v. Richardson, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 122, note. But this writ, in point of fact, is not always issued. 2 Kyd on Corp. 309.

10. Distinction Between Ouster and Seizure. — The distinction is thus set forth in Rex v. London, 2 T. R. 522: "Where it clearly appears to the court that a liberty is usurped by wrong, and upon no title, judgment only of ouster shall be entered. But when it appears that a liberty has been granted, but has been misused, judgment of seizure into the king's hands shall be given." See People v. Bartlett, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 422; People v. Rensselaer, etc., R. Co., 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 113, 30 Am. Dec. 33.

As to the effect of a judgment of seizure, see Vincennes Bank v. State, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 267, 12 Am. Dec. 234; 2 Kyd on Corp. 409.

excludes him from the office as long as the judgment remains in force.¹ Such judgment takes effect from its rendition and produces an instantaneous vacancy in the office. It is self-executing.² The judgment creates no new rights, but merely declares existing ones.³ A judgment of ouster is not retroactive so as to affect or destroy acts done or contracts made prior to its rendition,⁴ and recitals to that effect in the judgment may be disregarded as surplusage.⁵

5. Res Judicata and Collateral Attack. — The judgment is res judicata upon the rights in issue,⁶ and cannot be collaterally attacked.⁷

6. Contempt Proceedings. — Disobedience of a judgment of ouster may be punished as a contempt of court.⁸

XI. COSTS. — On informations in nature of quo warranto, at common law, where there is no relator the court cannot give judgment against the defendant for costs.⁹ The right to, and liability for, costs is a matter of statutory regulation.¹⁰ In England the statute of Anne authorized the recovery of costs by or against the relator,¹¹ and under statutes in the United States the

But in State v. Smith, 17 R. I. 416, where the defendant justified upon two grounds, first, under a re-election, and second, under his right to hold over under a former election, it was held that upon finding that the defendant had no right to hold over under the election in which the relator claimed, but still had a right to hold over until his successor could qualify, a judgment of ouster should be limited to his holding or exercising the office until his successor could qualify to act.

The judgment does not necessarily declare a vacancy in the office, this depending upon the further question whether any one else is entitled to it. State v. Ralls County Ct., 45 Mo. 58.

A Writ of Assistance or Leave to Issue an Execution should not be granted directing the sheriff to put the successful party into possession of the office and the books and papers belonging to it. So far as the office is concerned, such judgment executes itself, and so far as the possession of the possession of the books and papers is concerned, the remedy provided by the code must be pursued. *People v. ality of such enactment may be inquired into in quo warranto proceedings against the person assuming to exercise the office or franchise.¹

The Questions upon Which Title to Office Depends, such as eligibility, election, appointment, qualification, and the like, have been elsewhere specially considered.²

(2) Forfeiture of Office. — Quo warranto is the appropriate remedy to enforce the forfeiture of an office, or a removal for cause,³ unless, of course, another and exclusive remedy has been provided by the constitution or statute, such as impeachment proceedings, or proceedings before an officer vested with the power of removal.⁴ The existence of the cause of forfeiture may be determined in the quo warranto proceedings, and it is not necessary that there should have been a prior judicial ascertainment thereof,⁵ except, of course, where it is the prior conviction which is made the cause of forfeiture, for in such a case there can be no forfeiture until conviction.⁶ What will operate as a forfeiture of office has been elsewhere considered.⁷

(3) Official Misconduct or Illegal Action. — Quo warranto will not lie merely to redress official misconduct, or to test the legality of official action upon the part of one whose right to exercise the legitimate powers of the office is not in issue.⁸

(4) Existence of Office. — Quo warranto will not lie to try the title to an office which has no legal existence.¹ But it has been held that quo warranto is a proper remedy against persons who assume to hold offices created by an unconstitutional statute.²

(5) Expiration of Term. — Leave to file an information to try the title to an office may be refused, and generally will be refused, when the term of office has expired³ or will expire before the proceedings can be determined.⁴ It has been frequently held that a judgment of ouster will not be entered against an officer after his term of office has expired, and that if the term expires pendente lite the proceedings should be dismissed, because no substantial right could be subserved by such a judgment.⁵ But where ouster of the incumbent is not the sole object of the proceedings, as where a fine is to be imposed, or where a conviction is necessary to invalidate past acts or to enable the relator to recover damages or costs, the proceedings may be brought or continued even after the expiration of the term of office involved.⁶

Abolition of Office. — The title of the relator to the office which he seeks having been extinguished by the repeal of the law creating the office, the court did not err in refusing to allow the information quo warranto to be filed. b. WHO ARE PUBLIC OFFICERS SUBJECT TO WRIT — (1) In General. — Quo warranto will lie only to try the title to a public office as distinguished from a mere employment as deputy or servant.¹ The office must be a permanent substantive office, and not merely a position held at the will of others.² In England an information in the nature of quo warranto will lie for usurping any office, whether created by charter of the crown alone or by the crown with the consent of Parliament, provided the office be of a public nature and a substantive office, and not merely the function or employment of a deputy or servant held at the will and pleasure of others.³ The statute of Anne by its terms extended only to offices and franchises in municipal corporations.⁴ But corresponding statutes in the United States are not so limited, and extend to any public office or franchise, state or municipal.⁵

c. TRIAL OF RELATOR'S TITLE TO OFFICE. — At common law and in the absence of statute changing the rule, the respondent's title to the office is the sole issue to be tried, and the relator's title is not in issue and is immaterial,² except so far as it may be necessary to show that he has sufficient interest to maintain the proceedings.³ Of course, in many cases the relator's title is incidentally and necessarily passed upon in determining the respondent's title, but if, having succeeded in ousting the incumbent, the relator is not voluntarily admitted to the office, he must resort to some other form of remedy to enforce his right to the office.⁴ In order to obviate the necessity of resorting to two proceedings, one to oust the incumbent, and another to seat the claimant, the remedy by quo warranto has been extended, in many states, so that the right to title both of the incumbent and of the relator or plaintiff may be determined in the same proceeding by quo warranto.⁵ Under such statutes the judgment may be upon the rights of both relator and respondent or upon the right of the respondent alone, as circumstances and justice may require.¹ Certainly the respondent cannot complain if the court fails to pass upon the relator's claim to the office.² Sometimes it has been held that in an ex officio proceeding by the attorney-general on behalf of the state the rights of a third person claiming the office will not be determined, though the rule is otherwise where the information is prosecuted at the relation of the claimant.³ Under some statutes, if the claimant fails to establish his title, the proceeding must fail, although the incumbent has no right to continue in office. An information showing no title in the relator is bad on demurrer.⁴

has been provided by statute.¹ The question of corporate existence cannot be raised collaterally.² Quo warranto is an appropriate remedy to forfeit the charter and franchises of a municipal corporation in case of abuse or misuser,³ but such forfeiture has usually been denied upon grounds independent of the form of remedy.⁴

b. TERRITORIAL JURISDICTION. — Quo warranto has been usually held to be an appropriate remedy to try the jurisdiction of a public or municipal corporation over a certain territory, as, for instance, in the case of an attempted extension of corporate limits.⁵ Other cases have taken a different view upon the ground that quo warranto is not the proper remedy to test the legality of official acts,⁶ and held that if an official attempts to exercise power in a territory within which he is not authorized to act, the remedy is by injunction.⁷

c. POWERS AND FRANCHISES NOT CONFERRED BY LAW. — Quo warranto lies to oust a public or municipal corporation from the enjoyment and exercise of particular franchises and powers not conferred upon it by law.² Quo warranto is not an appropriate remedy to try the right of a city to enact a particular ordinance,³ nor to compel the performance of a municipal duty or to punish its neglect,⁴ nor generally to try the validity of corporate action not amounting to the unlawful exercise of a public franchise.⁵

3. Private Corporations — a. CORPORATE EXISTENCE. — Quo warranto is the appropriate and exclusive remedy to oust persons from a corporate franchise in cases of illegal user, usurpation, or forfeiture of such franchise,⁶ unlawful acts of a corporation are grounds for forfeiture, it is proper to oust the corporation of all its franchises by quo warranto.¹ Quo warranto will not lie in the absence of statute merely to test the legality of acts of a corporation not amounting to the usurpation of a franchise,² such as the legality of its title or possession of property.³ There is a distinction between franchises and powers. Not every ultra vires act of a corporation is ground for quo warranto.⁴

4. Officers of Private Corporations — a. IN GENERAL. — Quo warranto is usually held to be an appropriate remedy to try an office in a private corporation, either at common law or under special statutory provisions.⁵ Some cases hold, however, that the proceeding to try the title to an office in a private corporation is purely statutory, and that quo warranto will not lie at common law for that purpose, because the office is not a public office.⁶ In England the statute of Anne authorizing informations to try title to corporate offices was confined to offices in municipal corporations,¹ and an information will not lie to try the title of an officer of a private corporation, unless the corporation has public duties.² But corresponding statutes in the United States have been given a broader construction.³

b. DISTINCTION BETWEEN OFFICE AND EMPLOYMENT. — Quo warranto will not lie to try the title of a mere employee as distinguished from an officer of a corporation.⁴ Thus, an information will not lie to remove officers of a corporation who hold office under an election by directors, as these are merely servants or agents of the company.⁵

c. EXPIRATION OF TERM. — Leave to file the information will generally be refused when the term of office in question has expired.⁶ Subsequent resignation is no defense.⁷ But the title of one assuming to act as a corporate officer cannot be tried in proceedings against his successor.⁸

d. OFFICIAL MISCONDUCT. — Quo warranto will not lie to redress a breach of trust or neglect of official duty.⁹

5. Franchises — a. GENERAL RULES. — Quo warranto lies to try the right to a public franchise.¹⁰ A public franchise in this sense is a privilege or immunity in which the public have an interest, as distinguished from mere private rights, and which cannot be exercised without authority derived from the sovereign power.¹¹ Quo warranto will not lie for a mere private franchise not connected with public government.¹² The writ will sometimes lie against a corporation when it would not lie against an individual, for a corporation has only such powers as have been granted to it, and the exercise of any other powers as a corporation may be said to be the usurpation of a franchise.¹³ But even in the case of corporations there is a distinction between franchises and powers, and it is not every ultra vires act that will amount to the usurpation of a franchise.¹⁴ Quo warranto will lie to forfeit the exclusiveness of a franchise without affecting the right to exercise the main franchise itself.¹ It will not lie, however, to suspend a franchise without forfeiting it.² In England the statute of Anne, authorizing informations by a private relator, extended only to corporate franchises and corporate officers, but corresponding American statutes extend to any franchise without regard to whether it is a corporate franchise or not.³

b. APPLICATION OF RULES—(1) Tolls.—The right to erect gates and collect tolls upon roads, bridges, canals, channels, or other highways is a franchise triable upon quo warranto.⁴

(2) Ferries.—The right to operate a ferry is a franchise triable by quo warranto.⁵

(3) Dams.—The right to maintain a dam across a stream is a franchise triable on quo warranto.⁶

(4) Banking.—The right to conduct a banking business is not a franchise, although regulated by law, and if individuals claim and exercise the right of banking, while they may be subject to the penalties of the statute, they are not subject to quo warranto.⁷ But if a corporation engages in banking as a corporation without authority of law, it usurps a franchise and may be ousted by quo warranto.⁸

(5) Licenses.—A license to engage in a particular business or occupation has been held to be such a franchise as will support quo warranto proceedings to try the right,⁹ but the better opinion seems to be to the contrary, in the absence of statute extending the remedy.¹⁰

(6) Use of Streets and Highways.—The right under a municipal ordinance or contract to operate a street railway or to lay pipes or string wires in or along a public street or highway has been held not a franchise and not triable by quo warranto. Any unlawful user must be redressed as other ordinary wrongs or breaches of contract.¹¹ But a contrary view has been taken, and it has been held that a grant by a city, by authority of its charter, of the right to use its streets and highways for the purpose of laying pipes, etc., is a franchise for which quo warranto will lie.¹

(7) Private Contract with City.—Quo warranto will not lie to enforce performance of a private contract with a city,² or to test the validity of such a contract.³

(8) Rights Claimed Ex Officio.—Quo warranto has been sometimes granted to try the right of one conceded to be a lawful officer to exercise or perform certain functions claimed as an incident of his office, upon the ground that the exercise of such functions constituted a franchise.⁴

6. Miscellaneous Cases—a. TAXATION.—The right to assess a public tax is not such a franchise as will support quo warranto.⁵

b. ADOPTION OF FENCE LAW.—The legality of an election held to determine whether the "fence law" should be adopted in a certain county cannot be tried by quo warranto.⁶

c. LOCATION OF COUNTY SEAT.—Quo warranto proceedings cannot be employed to contest an election upon the question of the location of a county seat.⁷

d. RECOVERY OF REAL ESTATE.—Quo warranto is not an appropriate remedy for the recovery of real estate except where it has escheated or been forfeited to the state.⁸

e. RIGHT OF CORPORATION IN PUBLIC LANDS.—Under the Ohio statute, quo warranto will lie against a railroad corporation to try its claim to occupy the canal lands of the state.⁹

In McDonald v. Alcona County, 91 Mich. 463, it was held that the action of the board of supervisors in selling a county poor farm was the exercise of a franchise, but as they had that power by law, quo warranto would not lie to set aside the sale because made to a member of the board.

In Atty.-Gen. v. McDonald, 3 Wis. 805, the right of a mayor to hold court as a justice of the peace under an unconstitutional statute was determined on quo warranto.

Contra.—A proceeding by quo warranto will not be allowed for the purpose of preventing a public officer from exercising any right or privilege incident to his office, and it cannot be used to restrain an officer from doing a particular act, the right to perform which is claimed as a part of his official functions.

11. Race Meeting.—The term race meeting, as used in a statute regulating such meetings, was held to apply only to horse races, and not to extend to "races between cattle, men, reindeer, dogs, or other beings or animals." State v. Roby, 142 Ind. 182. See also the title HORSE RACING, vol. 15, p. 746.

RACEWAY. — See note 1.

RACING. — See the title HORSE RACING, vol. 15, p. 746.

RADIUS. — A radius is a straight line drawn from the centre of a circle to any point of the circumference. Its length is half the diameter of that circle, or is the space between the centre and the circumference.³

RAFFLE. (See also the title GAMING, vol. 14, p. 683.) — A raffle is a game of perfect chance, in which every participant is equal with every other in the proportion of his risk and prospect of gain. The prize is a common fund or that which is purchased by a common fund. Each is an equal actor in developing the chances in proportion to his risk. Whether they are developed with dice or with some other instrument is not material. The successful party takes the whole prize, and all the rest lose. The element of one against the many, the keeper against the bettors, either directly or indirectly, is not to be found in it. It has no keeper, dealer, or exhibitor.⁴

RAILROAD—RAILWAY. (See also the titles MECHANICS' LIENS, vol. 20, p. 255; RAILROADS, post.) — The words "railroad" and "railway" are synonymous, and in all ordinary circumstances they are to be treated without distinction of meaning, as including every species of road embraced in the

1. Raceway. — In Wilder v. De Cou, 26 Minn. 10, it was held that the technical meaning of the term raceway, as used to designate the mode of conducting water for hydraulic purposes, might be shown by the testimony of experts.

2. Rackrent. — See Truman v. Kerslake, (1894) 2 Q. B. 777.

3. Radius. — State v. Berard, 40 La. Ann. 172. A Louisiana act prohibited private markets "within a radius of six squares" of any public market. In State v. Barthe, 41 La. Ann. 46, it was held that the words "within a radius of six squares" did not import that the distance was to be measured in an air line, but that the words were intended to mean a route or distance of six squares in all directions from a public market such as a human being could use. The court noted the definition of radius as given in State v. Berard, 40 La. Ann. 172, and quoted in the text, but held the definition to be obiter. From this decision Bermudez, C. J., and Fenner, J., dissented. See generally the title MARKETS, vol. 19, pp. 1149, 1150.

Restraint of Trade. — A dentist sold his business, contracting with the purchaser not to practice dentistry "within a radius of ten miles" of L. This was held to be a valid contract not to practice dentistry within ten miles of the centre of the village of L. Cook v. Johnson, 47 Conn. 175. See also the title RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

4. Raffle. — Stearnes v. State, 21 Tex. 699, in which case it was held that though an ordinary raffle for property not exceeding five hundred dollars in value was not illegal, a "grand raffle," so called, was an entirely different game, and was illegal.

In Com. v. Manderfield, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 459, it was said: "The disposal of any species of property, or, in the comprehensive language of the Act of Assembly, any 'other matters or things whatever,' by any of the schemes or games of chance popularly regarded as innocent, come within the terms of the law. The raffles which occur daily at the street corners, in barrooms, at fairs, and at other places are as clearly violations of the criminal law as the most elaborate and carefully organized lotteries by which the ignorant and credulous are swindled out of their hard earnings."

Game Played with Dice. — See the title GAMING, vol. 14, p. 683, and see Wetmore v. State, 55 Ala. 200.

Lottery. — See the title LOTTERIES, vol. 19, p. 590, and see State v. Kansas Mercantile Assoc., 45 Kan. 353.

Slot Machine—Keeper. — In Prendergast v. State, 41 Tex. Crim. 364, in holding that a slot machine was not a raffle, the court said: "In this machine it does not appear that there was no keeper or exhibitor. On the contrary, the owner of the saloon was the keeper, and all persons were not interested in the common fund."

5. Raft of Logs—Vessel. — In The Annie S. Cooper, 48 Fed. Rep. 704, it was said: "A raft of logs is a contrivance whereby the logs themselves are kept together, and thus made capable of being transported. They are not the means, and the whole structure is not a means, of transporting anything but the things which make up the structure. Therefore, a raft of logs might not be strictly a vessel."

Rafting. — A charter authorized a boom company to lay and maintain a boom across a river, and specified fees and tolls were allowed for rafting and securing logs and timber. It was held that the duty of sorting and rafting according to ownership was imposed by the charter under the term rafting. Macchias Boom v. Sullivan, 85 Me. 343.

6. Rags—Fire-insurance Policy. — In Mooney v. Howard Ins. Co., 138 Mass. 375, 52 Am. Rep. 277, it was held, in an action on a fire-insurance policy on a junk dealer's stock of rags, that evidence was competent to show that by usage in the trade rags included all general sense of the term used.¹ But it may appear from the context or other circumstances that the words were used in different senses, and in such cases the courts have distinguished them.² The term "railroad" or "railway" in its broadest sense is very comprehensive, and has been held to include the franchise, easement or right of way, roadbed, superstructure, depot buildings, turnouts, rolling stock, shops, tools, materials, and all other property, real and personal, owned and used in connection with the road or its operation.³

articles used in the manufacture of paper. See also the title FIRE INSURANCE, vol. 13, p. 107 et seq.

1. "Railroad" Synonymous with "Railway." — Massachusetts L. & T. Co. v. Hamilton, (C. C. A.) 88 Fed. Rep. 588; Ferguson v. Sherman, 126 Cal. 169; State v. Brin, 30 Minn. 522; Funk v. St. Paul City R. Co., 61 Minn. 435; Hestonville, etc., Pass. R. Co. v. Philadelphia, 89 Pa. St. 210; Millvale v. Evergreen R. Co., 131 Pa. St. 1; Gyger v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 136 Pa. St. 96; Rafferty v. Central Traction Co., 147 Pa. St. 589, 30 Am. St. Rep. 763; Old Colony Trust Co. v. Allentown, etc., Rapid Transit Co., 192 Pa. St. 596; Bammel v. Kirby, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 198; Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Donahoe, 56 Tex. 162; Central, etc., R. Co. v. Morris, 68 Tex. 56; Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Weaver, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 41 S. W. Rep. 848.

No Variance. — In State v. Brin, 30 Minn. 522, it was held that a discrepancy between the name "St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railroad Company" in an indictment and the name "St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway Company" in the evidence was unimportant.

2. "Railroad" and "Railway" Distinguished. — Railroad Com'rs v. Market St. R. Co., 132 Cal. 677; Shipley v. Continental R. Co., 13 Phila. (Pa.) 128, 36 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 450; Gyger v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 136 Pa. St. 96; Front St. Cable R. Co. v. Johnson, 2 Wash. 114.

Thus, the term railroad is sometimes applied to steam railroads, and railway to street railways. Trust Co. v. State, 109 Ga. 736; Gyger v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 136 Pa. St. 96.

Right of Way and Rails. — In Munkers v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 60 Mo. 338, it was said: "The word railroad, says a leading lexicographer, should be confined to the highway in which the railway is laid, and the word railway to the rails when laid, and this is declared to be a useful distinction. This distinction seems to have been observed in our statute in the third subdivision of the second section, relating to railroad corporations, where power is given to every such corporation to lay out its road not exceeding one hundred feet in width."

3. Broad Sense of Term. — Morgan v. Donovan, 58 Ala. 260; Pierce v. Emery, 32 N. H. 484.

"In a broader sense a railroad includes all the land, works, buildings, and machinery required for the support and use of the road or way with its rails." Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Eisert, 127 Ind. 163.

In the popular sense of the term, railway means "a way upon which trains pass by means of rails." Doughty v. Fairbank, 10 Q. B. D. 359.

"The term railroad * * * may include all that is involved in the business of moving passengers and freight over a physical structure." Central Trust Co. v. Colorado Midland R. Co., 89 Fed. Rep. 561.

Appurtenances — Structures. — In Knevals v. Florida Cent., etc., R. Co., (C. C. A.) 66 Fed. Rep. 231, it was said: "The general term of a railroad, as ordinarily used, includes many kinds of property, both real and personal, and cannot, with any degree of propriety, be confined to the track, or the land, simply, necessary to lay the track upon. It is not necessary to consider whether the land can pass as appurtenant to land, for it is unquestionable that land may pass as appurtenant to a railroad."

In U. S. Trust Co. v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 8 N. Mex. 689, it was said: "In its ordinary acceptation, and large sense, the term railroad fairly includes all structures which are necessary and essential to its operation." And in U. S. v. Denver, etc., R. Co., 150 U. S. 12, it was held that all necessary appurtenances of a railroad might fairly be regarded as parts or portions of the railroad.

Same — Railroad Tracks. — Land held and in actual use by a railroad company for side tracks, switches, and turnouts, upon which shops, depots, roundhouses, and other superstructures are built, has been held to be within the term "railroad track." Ohio, etc., R. Co. v. Weber, 96 Ill. 443, 5 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 101; Pfaff v. Terre Haute, etc., R. Co., 108 Ind. 145, 29 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 181. See also Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Paddock, 75 Ill. 616; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. People, 195 Ill. 184; Oregon Short-Line R. Co. v. Gooding, (Idaho 1899) 59 Pac. Rep. 822. And see the title TAXATION.

Same — Siding — Platforms, Etc. — "The word railroad ex vi termini includes sidings." Black v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 58 Pa. St. 252.

In London, etc., R. Co. v. Llandudno Imp. Com'rs, (1897) 1 Q. B. 287, it was held that a platform of a railway station and the roof covering the railway, the platform, and the sidings might be rated for taxation as land used only as a railway.

But in Williams v. London, etc., R. Co., (1900) 1 Q. B. 760, reversing (1899) 2 Q. B. 197, it was held that land used for a railway shed within which were a number of railway lines, comprising sidings and running alongside platforms, for the purpose of loading and unloading railway trucks with goods, the premises being situated at some distance from the company's main line, was not land used as a railway.

Same — Station. (See also the title STATIONS (RAILROAD); and see DEPOTS, vol. 9, p. 366.) — The term has been held to include a station. Richmond v. North London R. Co., L. R. 3 Ch. 679. See also Cother v. Midland R. Co.,

2 Phil. 469; Midland R. Co. v. Ambergate, etc., R. Co., 10 Hare 369.

In State v. Railroad Com'rs, 56 Conn. 313, it was held that a provision in the charter of a railroad company that land might be taken for the railroad implied that it might be taken for necessary passenger stations and freight depots. The court said: "Depots for passengers and freight are essential parts of railroads. A railroad is incomplete without them." See also the title EMINENT DOMAIN, vol. 10, p. 1043.

Branches.—That a railway includes branches, see Bristol, etc., R. Co. v. Garton, 8 H. L. Cas. 477.

Bridge. (See also the title BRIDGES, vol. 4, p. 918.)—The crossing of a river by a railroad track on piers, or what is known as a "railroad bridge," is neither a bridge, a ferry, nor any public means of crossing by any ordinary method of travel, such as is contemplated in ordinary legislation concerning toll roads and bridges. Lake v. Virginia, etc., R. Co., 7 Nev. 206. See also Passaic, etc., River Bridge v. Hoboken Land, etc., Co., 13 N. J. Eq. 81; Bridge Proprietor v. Hoboken Co., 1 Wall. (U. S.) 116. Compare Enfield Toll Bridge Co. v. Hartford, etc., R. Co., 17 Conn. 40.

In Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Louisville City R. Co., 2 Duv. (Ky.) 178, it was said: "It has been authoritatively adjudged that the simple term 'bridge' means a viaduct in a road dedicated to common use, and that the qualified phrase 'railroad bridge' means a viaduct constructed for the exclusive use of railroad transportation."

In Anderson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 117 Ill. 26, it was held that a bridge across a navigable stream forming the boundary between Illinois and another state, and constructed and used exclusively by a railroad company as part of its continuous line of railroad, came, for the purpose of taxation, within the denomination of railroad tracks.

Cars, Locomotives, Etc.—The term railroad includes cars, locomotives, etc. See Elizabethtown, etc., R. Co. v. Elizabethtown, 12 Bush (Ky.) 233; Phillips v. Winslow, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 448. Compare Sangamon, etc., R. Co. v. Morgan County, 14 Ill. 166.

Elevator.—See the title EXEMPTIONS (FROM TAXATION), vol. 12, p. 365.

Embankment.—It has been held that an embankment forming the roadbed and embankments forming the approaches to highways or street crossings, rendered necessary by the construction of a railroad, were a part of the railroad track. Nicks v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 84 Iowa 27; Farley v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 42 Iowa 234; Newtown v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 66 Iowa 423; Gatès v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 82 Iowa 518.

Same—Interstate Commerce.—See the title INTERSTATE COMMERCE, vol. 17, p. 124.

Railroad Connections.—See CONNECT, CONNECTIONS, ETC., vol. 6, p. 600; and see Black v. Delaware, etc., Canal Co., 24 N. J. Eq. 455, reversing 22 N. J. Eq. 130. See also the title CONNECTING CARRIERS (OF GOODS), vol. 6, p. 603.

Railroad Crossing.—See the title CROSSINGS, vol. 8, p. 335.

Railway Cut.—In Newton v. Louisville, etc.,

R. Co., 110 Ala. 477, it was said: "The words 'railway cut' have a certain and definite meaning, and comprise as well the sloping sides as the deepest part of the excavation." And in that case it was held that where the land conveyed in a deed was described as the portion of certain lots lying south of a railway cut, only the land lying adjacent to and south of the upper and outer edge of the cut was conveyed, and that the deed did not convey the sloping sides of the cut down to the lower and inner edge.

Railway Employees.—A policy of insurance provided that the policy should not cover injuries resulting from walking on or being on any railroad bridge or roadbed, railway employees excepted. It was held that a traveling salesman for a coal company was not within the exception. The court said: "Giving to the words 'railway employee' the meaning which the context requires, no other person can be embraced within that term than one whose employment requires him to work on or about a railroad, and whose employer is one who operates a railroad, either as owner or otherwise." Yancey v. Aetna L. Ins. Co., 108 Ga. 352.

In Cotten v. Fidelity, etc., Co., 41 Fed. Rep. 506, however, it was held that an agent of a transportation company which itself was employed by a railroad company to attend to transfers of baggage was an employee of the railroad company within the meaning of a similar policy.

Employment in or about Railway.—In Milner v. Great Northern R. Co., (1900) 1 Q. B. 795, it was held that employment by a railway company in a railway refreshment room, to which the only entrance for the public was from the station platform, was not employment in or about a railway within the meaning of the English Workmen's Compensation Act of 1897.

Railroad Fences. (See also the title FENCES, vol. 12, p. 1061.)—In Denver, etc., R. Co. v. Robinson, 6 Colo. App. 432, it was said: "Some of the witnesses, in speaking of them, used the expression 'railroad fence;' and counsel seem to think that an inference ought therefore to be indulged in that the fences belonged to the railroad company. But the expression had no special meaning beyond the identification of the particular fence of which the witness was speaking. The plaintiff used the term to distinguish the fence he referred to from the 'pasture fence;' and there is nothing to indicate that any witness intended to be understood as expressing an opinion concerning the ownership of the 'railroad fence.'"

Railroad Property.—In Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Walker, 47 Fed. Rep. 685, it was said: "'Railroad property' and 'the property of a railroad company' are not equivalent terms. The term 'railroad property' is commonly understood to mean the property which is essential to a railroad company to enable it to discharge its functions and duties as a common carrier by rail. It includes the roadbed, right of way, tracks, bridges, stations, rolling stock, and such like property. On the other hand, lands owned and held for sale or other disposition for profit, and in no way connected

But the term may be confined to the right of way¹ or to the physical structure alone,² and may sometimes mean the track or ground upon which the rails constituting the track are laid, or it may mean the right of way including the track and the land on either side of the track, according to the connection in which the word is used.³

Railroad and Street Railroad. — The word "railroad" or "railway," in its broadest signification, would undoubtedly include a street railroad, all railroads being more or less alike in their physical construction; and accordingly, in a number of cases the term has been held to include a street railroad.⁴ But whether the term includes a street railroad depends on the context and general intent of the instrument in which it is found,⁵ and it has often been confined to the ordinary steam railroad.⁶ The difference between railroads for general traffic and street with the use or operation of the railroad, are not railroad property in the sense mentioned, but are property of the railroad company independently of its functions and duties as a common carrier."

Same — After-acquired Property. — A railroad company executed a mortgage upon the railroad then constructed and to be constructed, etc., and all other corporate property, real and personal, of said railroad company, belonging or appertaining to said railroad, whether then owned or thereafter to be acquired. It was held that the mortgage upon the railroad did not apply to after-acquired lands unless they were used in connection with the actual operations of the road as a part thereof. Calhoun v. Memphis, etc., R. Co., 2 Flipp. (U. S.) 442, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 2,309.

Railroad Tickets. — See the title TICKETS AND FARES.

Railroads Distinguished from Express Companies. — Dinsmore v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 2 Fed. Rep. 468, 2 Flipp. (U. S.) 672; and see the title EXPRESS COMPANIES, vol. 12, p. 542.

1. Confined to Right of Way. — Central R. Co. v. Hudson Terminal R. Co., 46 N. J. L. 289.

Mechanic's Lien. — Thus, the term railroad, in a statute giving a mechanic's lien, has been confined to the limits of the right of way, the court refusing to extend it to include machine shops, workshops, roundhouses, etc. National Bank v. Gulf, etc., R. Co., (Tex. 1902) 66 S. W. Rep. 203.

2. Confined to Physical Structure. — Central Trust Co. v. Colorado Midland R. Co., 89 Fed. Rep. 561; and see the next succeeding note.

3. Track and Right of Way. — St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Postal Tel. Co., 173 Ill. 521. See Com. v. Haverhill, 7 Allen (Mass.) 524; Worcester v. Western R. Corp., 4 Met. (Mass.) 564.

In Peoria, etc., R. Co. v. Tamplin, 156 Ill. 294, it was held that the word railroad, as used in a deed, referred to the railroad track or the road between the rails or under the rails, and did not refer to the railroad right of way. See also Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Eisert, 127 Ind. 163.

Telegraph and Telephone. (See also the title TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES.) — In St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Postal Tel. Co., 173 Ill. 508, it was held that where authority was conferred upon a company to erect telegraph lines along and upon a railroad, the term railroad must mean the right of way, and not the track. See also Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Morgan's Louisiana, etc., R., etc., Co., 49 La. Ann. 58; New Orleans, etc., R. Co. v. Southern, etc., Tel. Co., 53 Ala. 211; Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Louisiana Western R. Co., 49 La. Ann. 1270. Compare Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Norfolk, etc., R. Co., 88 Va. 920.

4. Railroad Includes Street Railroad. — Toronto R. Co. v. Reg. (1896) A. C. 551; Johnson v. Stewart, 62 Ark. 164; *Bloxham v. Consumers' Electric Light, etc., R. 6. Railroad Held Not to Include Street Railroad. — Massachusetts L. & T. Co. v. Hamilton, (C. C. A.) 88 Fed. Rep. 588; Manhattan Trust Co. v. Sioux City Cable R. Co., 68 Fed. Rep. 82; Railroad Com'rs v. Market St. R. Co., 132 Cal. 677; Bloxham v. Consumers' Electric Light, etc., R. Co., 36 Fla. 519, 51 Am. St. Rep. 44; *Sears v. Marshalltown St. R. Railroad Distinguished from Street Railroad. — In Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Louisville City R. Co., 2 Duv. (Ky.) 178, it was said: "A railroad and a street railroad or way are, in both their technical and popular import, as distinct railroads consists in their use, and not in their motive power.¹

Belt Railroads, Dummy Lines, Construction Roads, Steam Roads, Underground Roads. — Belt railroads,² dummy lines,³ construction roads,⁴ steam railroads,⁵ and underground roads⁶ have been held to be railroads.

Railroad Company. — The word "railroad" may mean railroad company.⁷

and different things as a road and a street, or as a bridge and a railroad bridge. * * * A street railway is not, in either the popular or legislative sense, a railroad."

In State v. Duluth Gas, etc., Co., 76 Minn. 107, it was said: "All through our statutes the legislature has uniformly, so far as we have discovered, used the word railroad or railway, when unqualified, as referring exclusively to ordinary commercial railroads, while, on the other hand, when they have intended to refer to street railroads they have qualified the word railroad by the prefix 'street.'" See also Funk v. St. Paul City R. Co., 61 Minn. 435.

Fellow-servants. — Under an act defining who are fellow-servants it has been held that the term railroad did not include street railways. Riley v. Galveston City R. Co., 13 Tex. Civ. App. 247. See also Funk v. St. Paul City R. Co., 61 Minn. 435.

Railway Distinguished from Tramway. — Swansea Imp., etc., Co. v. Swansea Urban Sanitary Authority, (1892) 1 Q. B. 360.

1. Williams v. City Electric St. R. Co., 41 Fed. Rep. 556.

2. Belt Railroad. — In South, etc., Alabama R. Co. v. Highland Ave., etc., R. Co., 117 Ala. 412, it was said: "A belt railroad, as it is now commonly known, is a railroad encircling a city or other restricted territory, intersected by other railroads not having a common right of way into the territory, for the purpose of transferring and switching cars from one railroad to another with which it is not otherwise connected, or of transferring cars between such railroads and industrial plants located in the neighborhood of but not on such railroads. Such connections are usually made by the belt railroad in the suburbs, or near the outskirts, of the city."

3. Dummy Line. — Katzenberger v. Lawo, 90 Tenn. 235, 25 Am. St. Rep. 681.

In Birmingham Mineral R. Co. v. Jacobs, 92 Ala. 187, it was held that the railroad of a company engaged in operating it with dummy engines between two cities was a railroad within the terms of a statute requiring trains on railroads which cross each other to stop within one hundred feet of such crossing.

4. Construction Road. — A temporary road built for the purpose of facilitating the grading of railroad tracks has been held to be a railroad within a fellow-servant act. Roe v. Winston, (Minn. 1902) 90 N. W. Rep. 124.

In Doughty v. Firbank, 10 Q. B. D. 358, it was held that the term railway, in the English Employer's Liability Act of 1880, was not confined to railways belonging to railway companies, but applied also to a temporary railway laid down by a contractor, for the purposes of construction work.

5. Steam Railroad. — A statute provided that "every franchise or privilege to erect or lay telegraph wires, to construct or operate railroads along or upon any public street or highway, or to exercise any other privilege whatever," to be granted by a municipality, should be advertised and granted to the highest bidder. In construing this statute, the court said: "The word railroad is certainly broad enough to cover a steam railroad, and the privilege of laying and operating a steam railroad through a city is clearly included in 'any privilege whatever.'" People v. Craycroft, 111 Cal. 546.

6. Underground Road. — In Matter of New York Dist. R. Co., 42 Hun (N. Y.) 621, affirmed 107 N. Y. 42, an underground road was held to be a street railroad.

7. Railroad Company. (See also the title RAILROADS, post.) — Calhoun v. Memphis, etc., R. Co., 2 Flipp. (U. S.) 445, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 2,309.

In Union Trust Co. v. Kendall, 20 Kan. 515, it was held that a corporation which had possession, control, and management of, and was engaged in the business of running and operating, a railroad in the state was a railroad corporation, although it was so engaged in the execution and discharge of a trust for the benefit of the bondholders and stockholders of the corporation which built and owned the road, and was not possessed of absolute ownership thereof.

8. Rail Car—Box Car. — See BOX CAR, vol. 4, p. 872.

Handcars. — In Benson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 75 Minn. 166, it was said: "The words railroad cars, in their general sense, include handcars, for they are constructed and used for running on the lines of rails of a railroad, being propelled by hand by those riding on them, through the aid of cranks and gearing."

CROSS-REFERENCE.

See the title RAILROADS, post, and references there given.

I. POWER TO CREATE COMMISSIONS. — Because of the nature of the privileges conferred upon railroad corporations and the character of the obligations assumed by them, their business is affected with a public use and is subject to legislative regulation.¹ Such regulation may be carried on through the agency of a commission,² and the practical impossibility of direct legislative supervision of the multifold details of the railroad business has led, both in England and in most of the United States, to the appointment or creation of officers or commissions generally called railroad commissioners, but sometimes designated boards of transportation.³

II. EXTENT OF REGULATION THROUGH AGENCY OF COMMISSIONERS — 1. In General. — The state regulation of railroad companies through the agency of commissioners may extend to all measures deemed essential not merely to secure the safety of passengers and freight, but to promote the convenience of the public in the transaction of business with them, and to prevent abuses by extortionate charges and unjust discriminations.⁴ But the legislature cannot lawfully authorize a commission, by direct or indirect legislation intended to accomplish that end, or necessarily involving that result, to take entire control of the business and operations of railroad companies.⁵

2. Limitation of State Regulation under Constitution of United States. — As under the Constitution of the United States the power to regulate interstate commerce is vested in Congress, it follows that the legislature of a state, in regulating the business and operations of railroad companies in the state, through the agency of a commission, cannot make any regulation that amounts to a regulation of interstate commerce.⁶

3. Power to Invest Commissioners with Judicial Powers. — Under a state constitutional provision authorizing the establishment of such courts inferior to the Supreme Court as the legislature may deem proper, the legislature may confer judicial powers upon a railroad commission.⁷

III. APPOINTMENT AND TENURE OF OFFICE. — In the United States state railroad commissions are usually merely the creatures of statute, created for the purpose of carrying into effect the legislative will. It follows that the legislature may, in the absence of a constitutional provision to the contrary, appoint them or prescribe the method of their appointment,¹ and may, in case a commissioner appointed refuses to act, provide for the appointment of a substitute and direct the manner of his appointment.² So, if not restrained by a constitutional provision, the legislature may abridge the term of office of a railroad commissioner, or specify an event upon the happening of which such term shall end,³ or may reserve to itself the right to remove the incumbent of the office, or to the governor the right to suspend him.⁴

IV. QUALIFICATIONS. — Under the constitutions and statutes of some of the United States certain qualifications are required of railroad commissioners. One of the most usual of these is that the commissioner shall not be or become interested in any wise in any railroad company.⁵

V. SALARIES AND EXPENSES. — In the United States the states which have created railroad commissions differ as to the manner of providing for the payment of their salaries and expenses. Under some of the statutes the state itself defrays the salaries and expenses of the commission directly out of the public treasury. Under other statutes different methods are adopted to apportion the salaries and expenses among the railroads regulated.⁶ The question of the constitutionality of some of the statutes of the latter class has been brought before the courts.⁷

VI. POWERS AND DUTIES — 1. In England. — In England the Railway and Canal Commission is a court of record, with supervisory powers over the general conduct of railroad companies. It possesses all such powers, rights, and privileges, necessary or proper for the due exercise of its jurisdiction, as are vested in a superior court. It may hear complaints, make orders, and restrain by injunction a disobedience of statutory regulations, and is authorized to enforce its orders and injunctions by penalties.⁸ It also has, under certain

2. Woodruff v. New York, etc., R. Co., 59 Conn. 63.

Failure to Elect. — Under the Constitution and statutes of Oregon, if there is a failure to elect a railroad commissioner at the time prescribed by statute the incumbent of the office under a prior election will hold over until his successor is elected and qualified. Eddy v. Kincaid, 28 Oregon 537.

Commissioners Not Ousted by Statute Amending Act Creating Commission. — A state statute establishing a railroad commission is not repealed and the commissioners elected under it deprived of their offices by a statute changing the name of the commission, imposing some new duties upon it, and professing to repeal the creative act, but in reality merely amending it. Abbott v. Beddingfield, 125 N. Car. 256.

2. In United States — a. IN GENERAL — Commissions Usually Merely Administrative Boards. — In the United States, as a general rule, a state railroad commission is merely an administrative board created by the state for carrying into effect the will of the state, as expressed by its legislation.² Commissions of this character are purely creatures of statute, and possess no power except what the statutes expressly confer upon them,³ and in every case their authority must affirmatively appear from the commission under which they claim to act.⁴

Matters Submitted to Regulation of Commissions. — The principal purpose of most of the statutes creating such commissions is the regulation of freight and passenger rates. Generally, however, the commissions are invested with comprehensive powers of regulation over all matters relating to the safety of passengers and freight and to the convenience of the public in its business relations with railroads.⁵

Powers of Investigation. — As it is essential to the usefulness of these commissions that they should be able to ascertain the manner in which the railroads under their supervision are being conducted, they are usually given ample power to investigate that subject, and to compel railroad companies to furnish them with necessary information.¹

Power to Investigate Complaints and Make Orders or Render Decisions. — Generally such commissions are required to investigate complaints made against railroad corporations which are alleged to have violated the law, or to be acting in contravention thereof, and they are authorized to make orders or render decisions in reference thereto.² But railroad commissions, as usually constituted, are not courts, nor are they, as a rule, invested with judicial functions,³ though they are sometimes authorized to exercise powers and functions resembling those conferred upon and exercised by regular courts.⁴

Orders or Decisions Enforced by Judicial Proceedings. — Under most of the statutes, the action or conclusion of the commission upon matters of complaint brought before it for investigation is neither final nor conclusive, nor is the commission usually invested with authority to enforce its decision or order, subsequent judicial proceedings being provided for or contemplated as the remedy for the enforcement, either by itself or by the party interested, of its order or decision in all cases where the party complained of, or against whom its decision is rendered, does not yield voluntary obedience thereto.⁵

Effect Given in Judicial Proceedings to Findings and Orders of Commissioners. — The statutes generally provide that the report or findings of the commission shall,

b. REGULATION OF CHARGES — (1) What Regulations Are Permissible —

(a) In General. — It is competent for the legislature of a state, through the agency of a commission, to limit and regulate the charges made by railroad companies for carrying passengers and freight, except where a company is protected from such regulation by a contract in its charter.⁴ To exempt a company from legislative interference in this respect, such exemption must appear in its charter in clear and unmistakable language, inconsistent with any reservation of power by the state.⁵

Power as to Repairs. — Under the Kansas statute (Laws 1883, c. 124, § 5; Gen. Stat. 1889, par. 1328; Gen. Stat. 1897, c. 69, §§ 8, 9), the state board of railroad commissioners may examine and decide what repairs upon a railroad are proper or necessary, and give notice thereof to the railroad corporation, and report their proceedings to the governor. But a provision in a company's charter authorizing it to fix, within maximum limits, the rates at which it will transport persons or property over its road vests the company with

(b) Constitutional Limitations — aa. RATES FIXED MUST BE REASONABLE — POWER OF COURTS. — From what has been said it is not to be inferred that this power of regulation through the agency of a commission is without limit, where a company is not protected therefrom by an express contract in its charter. It must be confined within constitutional bounds. Under pretense of regulating fares and freights, the state cannot require a railroad corporation to carry persons or property without reward; neither can it do that which in law amounts to a taking of private property for public use without just compensation.¹ The rates fixed must be reasonable, and whether they are so is a question to be determined by the courts.² It follows that a statute which attempts to make the findings of the commission as to what are equal and reasonable rates final, conclusive, and binding upon the courts is unconstitutional.³

Limitation upon Court's Power. — But the courts are not authorized to revise or exchange the body of rates imposed by the commission. They do not determine whether one rate is preferable to another, or what would, under all circumstances, be fair and reasonable as between carriers and shippers. Their power is confined to the determination of the question whether the rates

Statute Held Unconstitutional. — A statute regulating the charges to be made by persons or corporations owning or operating railroads, and vesting in a railroad commission supervision thereof, which discriminates between railroad corporations and persons operating railroads, and also between railroad corporations themselves, is unconstitutional. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Railroad Commission, 19 Fed. Rep. 679.

3. Statute Attempting to Make Commission's Findings Conclusive Unconstitutional. — Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Minnesota, 134 U. S. 418, 42 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 285 [reversing 38 Minn. 281, and in effect overruling Tilley v. Savannah, etc., R. Co., 5 Fed. Rep. 641]; Railway Transfer Co. v. Railroad, etc., Commission, 39 Minn. 231; State v. Co., 133 Cal. 25.

"Sufficient Evidence." — In a statute providing that in all suits against railroad corporations involving the charges of such corporations for the transportation of passengers or freight, the schedule of rates established by the railroad commission shall be deemed "sufficient evidence" that the rates therein fixed are just and reasonable, the term "sufficient evidence" has been held not to be synonymous with the term "conclusive evidence." Such a provision does not have the effect of shutting off all judicial investigation into the justice and reasonableness of the rates fixed by the commission, and is not, therefore, unconstitutional on that ground. Richmond, etc., R. Co. v. Trammel, 53 Fed. Rep. 196; Pensacola, etc., R. Co. v. State, 25 Fla. 310.

The effect of such provision is to make the schedule fixed by the commission competent and adequate evidence of the correctness of the action of the commission in the absence of countervailing proof that it has exceeded its powers, or has abused its discretion and invaded some right of the railroad company. Pensacola, etc., R. Co. v. State, 25 Fla. 310.

prescribed are unjust and unreasonable, and such as to work a practical destruction to rights of property.¹ If they find that a body of rates prescribed by a commission will have this effect they have power to restrain its operation,² and this though the commission has taken no positive action to enforce such rates.³ But a court of equity cannot enjoin a commission which is authorized by statute to fix rates, and is charged with the duty of enforcing them, from fixing such rates.⁴

Jurisdiction of Federal Courts. — The federal courts have jurisdiction of a suit against the railroad commissioners of a state, brought by a citizen of another state, to restrain them from enforcing certain rates and regulations, provided the state has no direct pecuniary interest therein, as such a suit is not a suit against "one of the United States" within the meaning of that provision of the Federal Constitution⁵ which declares that the judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit brought against one of the United States by a citizen of another state.⁶

Statutes Authorizing Appeals to Courts. — In some of the states there are statutes expressly authorizing appeals to the courts by railroad companies or other interested persons dissatisfied with rates fixed by the railroad commission.

1. Limit of Power of Courts. — Reagan v. Farmers' L. & T. Co., 154 U. S. 367; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Dey, 38 Fed. Rep. 656; Mercantile Trust Co. v. Texas, etc., R. Co., 51 Fed. Rep. 529; Southern Pac. Co. v. Railroad Com'rs, 78 Fed. Rep. 236; Steenerson v. Great Northern R. Co., 69 Minn. 353. See also Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Wellman, 143 U. S. 339.

Where a tariff of freight and passenger rates has been established by the railroad commissioners, and the railroad company and the commissioners differ as to whether such rates, considered as a whole, will prove remunerative to the company, and there is room for a difference of intelligent opinion on the question, the courts cannot interfere or substitute their judgment for that of the commissioners; the tariffs as fixed by the commissioners must, in so far as the courts are concerned, be left to the test of experiment. Storrs v. Pensacola, etc., R. Co., 29 Fla. 617; Pensacola, etc., R. Co. v. State, 25 Fla. 310.

2. Enforcement of Unreasonable Rates May Be Restrained. — Pick v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 6 Biss. (U. S.) 177; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 171 U. S. 361, affirming 64 Fed. Rep. 165; Reagan v. Farmers' L. & T. Co., 154 U. S. 367; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Dey, 38 Fed. Rep. 656; Mercantile Trust Co. v. Texas, etc., R. Co., 51 Fed. Rep. 529, 50 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 559; Southern Pac. Co. v. Railroad Com'rs, 78 Fed. Rep. 236. See also Richmond, etc., R. Co. v. Trammel, 53 Fed. Rep. 106; Higginson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 100 Fed. Rep. 235. But see McWhorter v. Pensacola, etc., R. Co., 24 Fla. 417, 12 Am. St. Rep. 220, 37 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 566.

3. Pick v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 6 Biss. (U. S.) 177.

Schedule Advertised to Take Effect on Certain Day. — Where a railroad commission has advertised that a schedule of rates as prepared by it will be put in force on a certain day, a court of equity has jurisdiction before the day named, on the application of a railroad company to be affected by such schedule, to restrain the enforcement thereof, on the ground of preventing a multiplicity of suits. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Dey, 35 Fed. Rep. 866. See also Southern Pac. Co. v. Railroad Com'rs, 78 Fed. Rep. 236.

4. Commission Cannot Be Enjoined from Fixing Rates. — McChord v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 183 U. S. 483, reversing 103 Fed. Rep. 216; McWhorter v. Pensacola, etc., R. Co., 24 Fla. 417, 12 Am. St. Rep. 220, 37 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 566. See also Southern Pac. Co. v. Railroad Com'rs, 78 Fed. Rep. 236.

In a suit to enjoin a board of commissioners from enforcing resolutions alleged to have been adopted by it, reducing the rates of transportation, the court will consider only resolutions that have been adopted by the board, and not what the board or its members intended or threatened to do in the future. Southern Pac. Co. v. Railroad Com'rs, 87 Fed. Rep. 21.

5. Const. U. S., Amendment 11.

6. Jurisdiction of Federal Courts of Suit by Citizen of Another State. — Reagan v. Farmers' L. & T. Co., 154 U. S. 362; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, affirming 64 Fed. Rep. 165; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Becker, 35 Fed. Rep. 883; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Dey, 35 Fed. Rep. 866; Mercantile Trust Co. v. Texas, etc., R. Co., 51 Fed. Rep. 529, 50 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 559; Clyde v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 57 Fed. Rep. 436; McWhorter v. Pensacola, etc., R. Co., 24 Fla. 417, 12 Am. St. Rep. 220, 37 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 566.

The jurisdiction of the federal courts in such case is not ousted by the fact that the statute authorizing the commissioners to fix rates provides that actions for penalties prescribed for disregarding them shall be brought in the name of the state, and for its benefit. Clyde v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 57 Fed. Rep. 436.

But where the statute contains such a provision, an action to enjoin the commissioners from instituting an action in the name of the state to recover the prescribed penalties is a suit against the state within the meaning of the constitution. McWhorter v. Pensacola, etc., R. Co., 24 Fla. 417, 12 Am. St. Rep. 220, 37 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 566.

Such statutes usually limit the jurisdiction of the court to the question of the justice and reasonableness of the rates.¹

Rates Fixed by Commission Effective until Appealed From. — Until an appeal has been made to, the judiciary to declare the regulations made by the commission voidable for the reasons mentioned, the tariff of rates fixed by it is the law of the land, and must be submitted to, both by railroads and by the parties with whom they deal.²

bb. STATE COMMISSIONS CANNOT REGULATE INTERSTATE COMMERCE. — A state commission cannot, of course, make any regulation of charges that amounts to a regulation of interstate commerce.³ But such a commission may regulate the charge made by a railroad company for switching cars where such charge is not a part of a through rate, and has no reference to interstate shipment; and this though the cars switched contain interstate freights. Such a regulation is not a regulation of interstate commerce.⁴

cc. AUTHORITY TO FIX REASONABLE RATES NOT DELEGATION OF LEGISLATIVE POWER. — A statute which provides that the rate charged by railroad companies shall be just and reasonable, and which authorizes the railroad commission to make and put in effect a schedule of just and reasonable rates, does not delegate to the commission any legislative power, and is not, therefore, open to any constitutional objection on that ground.⁵

(2) Powers Given to and Duties Imposed upon Commissioners — (a) In General. — Almost universally the statutes authorize and require the railroad commissioners to fix or regulate the rates on railroads in the state,⁶ and to prevent unjust discrimination or partiality in the charges made by railroad companies.⁷

1. Railroad Commission v. Weld, (Tex. 1902) 66 S. W. Rep. 1095.

Under the Provision of a Minnesota Statute (Stat. 1894, § 393, subdiv. d) providing for an appeal from an order of the state railroad commission to the District Court, if the commission makes an order fixing a tariff rate such order is not conclusive as to the reasonableness of such rate in the absence of an appeal therefrom. *State v. Some of the peculiar provisions of such statutes have received the interpretation of the courts.¹

(b) Power to Fix Joint Rates for Connecting Railroads. — Some of the statutes invest the commissioners with power to fix reasonable joint rates² of freight charges for connecting lines of road.³ Statutes delegating such power to commissioners have been held to be constitutional.⁴

Power to Make Distribution of Joint Charges. — Sometimes the commissioners are authorized, where railroad companies whose roads connect fail to agree upon a fair and just division of joint freight or passenger charges, to fix the pro rata part of such charges to be received by each of the companies.⁵

(c) Notice of Intention to Fix Rates. — By some of the statutes the commissioners are required, before fixing rates, to give notice of the time when and place where they will fix such rates.⁶ Under such a statute a schedule of rates fixed without the required notice being given is void.⁷

(d) Power to Obtain Necessary Information. — Generally the statutes make ample provision to enable the commissioners to ascertain the facts necessary to be known in order to arrive at and fix just and reasonable rates.⁸

(e) Publication of Rates. — In some jurisdictions the commissioners are required to publish the schedule of rates when made.⁹

1. Reducing Rates. — Under the Minnesota statute (now Stat. Minn. 1894, § 386, subdiv. e), the state railroad and warehouse commission, when reducing rates on a complaint that rates between certain points on a certain road are too high, may, for the purpose of preventing discrimination by its own acts, reduce the rates on the whole line or system. Steenerson v. Great Northern R. Co., 69 Minn. 353.

9. Under the Illinois Statute (Underwood's Stat., c. 114, § 19; Starr & Curt. Annot. Stat. Ill. 1896, c. 114, par. 173), requiring the railroad commissioners of that state to make for each railroad company doing business in the state a schedule of maximum rates, and to cause the publication of such schedule, the classifications of freights were held to be a part of the schedule and therefore to come within the requirement of publication. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Blackwood, 14 Ill. App. 503.

(3) Effect Given by Courts to Rates Fixed by Commission. — Some of the statutes expressly provide that the tariff of rates made by the commission shall be taken by the courts as prima facie evidence that such tariff is equal and reasonable, and thus throw upon a railroad company complaining of the rates fixed by the commission the burden of proving that they are not equal or reasonable.¹

c. POWERS IN REGARD TO STATIONS AND STATION HOUSES. — Under the statutes of some of the states questions relating to the establishment, location, and discontinuance of stations and the erection or enlargement of station houses are, where the safety and convenience of the public are concerned, left very largely to the determination of the railroad commissioners, and they are authorized to make orders in reference thereto which, when found by the courts to be reasonable, are binding upon the railroad companies concerned.² Under some of the statutes railroad commissioners are authorized to inspect the station houses or depots of all railroads operated in the

1. Effect of Rates Fixed by Commission as Evidence. — Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Dey, 38 Fed. Rep. 656; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Jones, 149 Ill. 361, 41 Am. St. Rep. 278; Burlington, etc., R. Co. v. Dey, 82 Iowa 312, 31 Am. St. Rep. 477, 45 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 391; Steenerson v. Great Northern R. Co., 69 Minn. 353; Jacobson v. Wisconsin, etc., R. Co., 71 Minn. 519, 70 Am. St. Rep. 358; State v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 80 Minn. 191.

Such a Provision Simply Prescribes a Rule of Evidence, and does not prevent railroad companies from having the question of the reasonableness of rates fixed determined in the courts. Burlington, etc., R. Co. v. Dey, 82 Iowa 312, 31 Am. St. Rep. 477, 45 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 391.

It does not, therefore, deprive such companies of their property without due process of law, Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Jones, 149 Ill. 361, 41 Am. St. Rep. 278; Burlington, etc., R. Co. v. Dey, 82 Iowa 312, 31 Am. St. Rep. 477, 45 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 391; or infringe upon the right of trial by jury, Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Jones, 149 Ill. 361, 41 Am. St. Rep. 278.

Nor is such a provision an attempted delegation of legislative power. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Jones, 149 Ill. 361, 41 Am. St. Rep. 278.

2. Erection, Location, or Change of Station or Station House. — As to the control of the Nebraska railroad commission, under Act Neb. June 6, 1885, over the erection, location, or change of stations or station houses, see State v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 19 Neb. 476, distinguishing State v. Republican Valley R. Co., 17 Neb. 647, 52 Am. Rep. 424.

Under the New York statute (Laws 1882, c. 353) the railroad commissioners have no power to require a railroad corporation to erect a station house on the line of its road. People v. New York, etc., R. Co., 104 N. Y. 58, 29 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 480.

Whether the South Carolina statute in force in 1886 (Gen. Stat., § 1457) conferred upon the railroad commissioners power to require a railroad company to establish and maintain a station house to be placed under a competent agent, quare. Railroad Com'rs v. Columbia, etc., R. Co., 26 S. Car. 353.

The Maine statute (Pub. Laws 1871, c. 204; Rev. Stat. Me. 1883, c. 51, § 122) empowering the railroad commissioners of that state to direct a railroad corporation to erect and maintain a depot at a specified place on the line of its road is constitutional. Railroad Com'rs v. Portland, etc., R. Co., 63 Me. 269, 18 Am. Rep. 208.

Addition to Station. — Under a statute authorizing railroad commissioners to require a railroad company to make "any addition to or change of its stations or station houses" which the safety and convenience of the public may require, the commissioners have power to require such a company to construct a station house at a regular station already established by it, the only existing accommodation thereat being a platform and sidetrack. State v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 12 S. Dak. 305.

Re-establishment of Station. — In Iowa it has been held that the railroad commissioners have power to require a railroad company to re-establish a station abandoned by it, only where the patrons of the road are deprived by such abandonment of reasonable facilities for transacting business with the company. State v. Des Moines, etc., R. Co., 87 Iowa 644.

Location of Depot. — Under the Connecticut statutes it was held to be the duty of the railroad commissioners to approve or disapprove of the location of a new site for a depot. State v. Railroad Com'rs, 56 Conn. 308, 36 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 510.

Discontinuance of Station. — In Chester v. Connecticut Valley R. Co., 41 Conn. 348, it was held that under Act Conn. 1866, c. 67 (Gen. Stat. Conn. 1888, § 3516), the railroad commissioners had power to discontinue any railroad station, however it might have been established, but they had no powers of arbitration. They acted in a judicial capacity, and their findings were required to be definite, and not to depend on any conditions to be performed by either party.

For the construction of the peculiar provisions of the New York statute (Laws 1890, c. 565, as amended by Laws 1892, c. 676, § 34) empowering the state board of railroad commissioners to authorize the discontinuance of railroad stations, see People v. Railroad Com'rs, 158 N. Y. 421, affirming 32 N. Y. App. Div. 158.

state and to require the railroad companies to provide suitable reception rooms,¹ and sometimes they are authorized to require the companies to have at their station houses bulletin boards announcing the times of the arrival and departure of trains.²

d. POWERS IN REGARD TO CROSSINGS — (1) In General. — To insure the safety of passengers and the public generally, and to prevent destruction of property, the statutes in some states expressly authorize the railroad commissioners to make certain regulations and orders relative to railroad crossings. The statutes conferring such authority usually provide for an appeal to the courts from the decisions or orders of the commissioners,³ and require such decisions and orders, in order to be enforceable, to be reasonable and just.⁴

(2) Street and Highway Crossings. — These statutory provisions generally have reference to street and highway crossings. They differ in the extent of the power which they confer upon the commissioners. Some of them authorize the commissioners to order the removal of grade crossings, and to determine what alterations shall be made, by whom, and at whose expense;⁵ while others have reference to railroads thereafter to be constructed and authorize the commissioners to direct the raising or lowering of highways at crossings, so as to avoid crossings at grade, and to require the construction and maintenance of bridges.⁶ But usually the authority conferred upon the commissioners is more limited, and they are merely authorized to require railroad companies to take certain precautions or to maintain certain devices at grade crossings in order to prevent accidents.⁷

(3) Crossings at Intersection of Other Railroads. — Some of the statutes authorize the commissioners to condemn crossings of one railroad over another and to fix the grade and manner of crossing.⁸

(4) Private Crossings. — In some jurisdictions commissioners have authority to order a railroad company to construct a private crossing where a person owns land on both sides of the road.⁹

c. POWER TO REQUIRE INTERSECTING ROADS TO INTERCHANGE CARS. — By some of the statutes railroad commissioners are given power to require railroad companies whose lines cross or intersect each other to put in connecting switches, and to transfer and interchange cars, where it is practicable and the interests of traffic require it.¹

VII. ENFORCEMENT OF ORDERS. — In England the railway commission is a court of record with power to enforce its own orders.²

In United States. — As has previously been stated, a railroad commission is, under the statutes of most of the United States, merely an administrative board and has no power to enforce its own orders. It cannot, therefore, compel a railroad company to conform its charges to the schedule of rates which it has established, or to obey any other order which it has promulgated. To compel such obedience an action in a court of competent jurisdiction must be brought.³ The usual and proper method of obtaining enforcement of such orders is by an application for a writ of mandamus,⁴ or by an action in equity to compel compliance therewith.⁵ Such methods of obtaining enforcement are usually prescribed by express statutory provision,⁶ but in a few states railroad commissioners are merely advisory officers and their orders cannot be enforced by the courts.⁷

Penalty for Charging or Receiving Unreasonable Compensation. — Though a statute making it a penal offense for a railroad corporation to charge or receive more than a just and reasonable rate of compensation for the transportation of passengers or freight is too uncertain for enforcement,¹ such uncertainty is obviated by a provision authorizing the railroad commission to make a schedule of reasonable and maximum rates, and by the making of such schedule by the commission,² as in such case the state, in a prosecution to recover the penalty prescribed for a violation of the statute, will be estopped to contend that any charge equal to or less than that prescribed in the schedule is unreasonable.³

2. Liability in Damages to Persons Injured. — Under statutes in some of the United States, railroad companies violating any of the regulations established by the state railroad commissioners are liable to persons injured thereby for the damages sustained by them in consequence of such violation.⁴

I. DEFINITION. — Railroad pools are contracts between rival railway companies whereby, in order to prevent competition, their business is united in one common total, from which the business or the money received therefor is divided among the combining companies in fixed percentages. They are of two kinds — traffic pools and money pools. A traffic pool is an agreement allotting a certain percentage of the total traffic to each road, and providing that if any road exceeds its share of the business, freight shall be diverted from it to the other roads until the agreed proportion is restored. A money pool is an agreement whereby the money received by all the combining roads for transportation is brought together into one total and divided among the roads in certain fixed percentages, which do not necessarily correspond to the proportion of the freight actually carried by each road.¹

II. LEGALITY — 1. In England. — It has been held in England that a bona fide contract or agreement between competing railroad corporations to divide their earnings in certain fixed proportions is not void as against public policy, provided such agreement is not injurious to the public or prejudicial to the shareholders in either company.²

But Where the Contract Amounts to an Amalgamation of the companies — a complete union and partnership — it can be entered into only under the express sanction of an Act of Parliament.³

Specific Performance. — Apart from the question of its legal validity, if a pooling contract proves to be one by which one of the contracting parties will gain considerable advantage at the expense of the other, while the other will receive no corresponding benefit, equity will not aid in enforcing it by a decree of specific performance.⁴

Line Not Authorized to Be Constructed. — A pooling contract entered into by a railroad company in reference to a line of road which it has not, at the time, been empowered to construct is ultra vires.¹

2. In United States — a. AT COMMON LAW. — In the United States the authorities are somewhat conflicting upon the question of the legality of pooling contracts. It seems to be well settled that all contracts which have a direct tendency to prevent healthy competition are invalid. Therefore, a contract between competing railroad companies to pool their earnings is invalid if from its terms it clearly appears that its object is not merely to avoid ruinous competition, but to stifle all competition, for the purpose of raising rates or preventing their reduction.² But where the object of the contract is to prevent unhealthy competition and at the same time to furnish the public with adequate facilities at fixed and reasonable rates, it would seem to be open to no objection upon grounds of public policy, and there would appear to be no sufficient reason why it should not be held valid and enforceable.³ In Louisiana, however, the rule would seem to be that any contract between competing railroad companies is unenforceable which has as its purpose the division of their traffic earnings between points where they were formerly competitors.⁴

Burden of Proof. — Whether or not its beneficent purpose can save from the condemnation of the law a contract between competing railroad corporations to pool their earnings, all such contracts are prima facie illegal. If such a contract can stand, it must be upon a complete affirmative showing that it was not formed to harm the public by repressing fair competition.⁵

Apportionment of Through Fares and Freights by Connecting Roads. — It is important to distinguish a pooling contract between competing companies from a contract between companies whose roads connect, but are not competing, for an apportionment of their earnings or of the sums received for through transportation. Contracts of the latter description are not open to objection on grounds of public policy, and, unless prohibited by statutory or charter restriction, are valid.⁶

b. UNDER STATUTES — (1) Federal Statutes. — By the Interstate Commerce Act,⁷ railroad companies subject to its provisions are forbidden to enter into pooling contracts.⁸

(2) State Statutes. — In some of the states contracts between railroad corporations to pool their earnings are prohibited by statute.⁹

c. DISPOSITION OF MONEY RECEIVED UNDER CONTRACT. — But whether a pooling contract is valid or not, if it has been executed and the receiver of one of the contracting companies has come into possession of money received

I. SCOPE OF ARTICLE. — The present article is designed to treat only those principles peculiar to the law of railroads which have not been treated elsewhere in this work. Particular branches of railroad law and many principles of general law intimately connected with the subject of railroads have been fully dealt with in other articles, as indicated in the cross-references immediately preceding. The law of street railroads forms the subject of a separate article.

II. GENERAL RIGHT TO BUILD AND OPERATE RAILROADS — 1. Private Railroads. — Private railroads are such as are built by individuals or corporations solely for their own use and benefit, as, for example, to aid in the working of mines or to convey the products of mines or manufactories from the lands of the owners. A private individual may build and operate such a railroad over his own land without any grant of authority from the legislature.¹

2. Public Railroads. — The right to build and operate a railroad for public use is a franchise the right to which can be derived from the state alone.² Such franchise, however, is not necessarily a corporate one, as railroads may be owned by private individuals, although instances of such ownership are rare, and in the United States at the present time practically all railroads are owned by private corporations.³

3. Government or Municipal Ownership. — In Canada certain railways have been constructed and are owned by the government.⁴ In the United States the reports show at least one case of state ownership,⁵ and it has been held that, within constitutional limits, municipal corporations may also build and operate railroads.⁶

III. LEGAL STATUS OF RAILROADS AND RAILROAD CORPORATIONS — 1. Railroads Quasi-public Highways. — In several of the states railroads are declared by the constitutions or by statutes to be public highways,⁷ and while such constitutional or statutory declarations do not make them highways in the same sense as public wagon-roads, upon which every one may transact his own business with his own means of conveyance, but only in the sense of being compelled to accept of each and all and to take and carry to the extent of their ability,⁸ still it is generally agreed that they are at least quasi-public highways, and they are commonly spoken of as such in the decisions of the courts.⁹

1. Private Railroads. — Moran v. Ross, 79 Cal. 159; Wilson v. Cunningham, 3 Cal. 241, 58 Am. Dec. 407; Hall v. Brown, 54 N. H. 495.

No Right to Invade Lands of Other Persons. — A private person cannot take, by transfer from a corporation organized to build a public railroad, the right to build a railroad for private purposes which will invade the premises of others. Stewart's Appeal, 56 Pa. St. 413; Batker v. Hartman Steel Co., 6 Pa. Co. Ct. 183. And see McCandless's Appeal, 70 Pa. St. 210.

2. Public Railroads. — Blake v. Winona, etc., R. Co., 19 Minn. 418, 18 Am. Rep. 345; McGregor v. Erie R. Co., 35 N. J. L. 89; Central R. Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 31 N. J. Eq. 475; Raritan, etc., R. Co. v. Delaware, etc., Canal Co., 18 N. J. Eq. 546; Matter of Amsterdam, etc., R. Co., 86 Hun (N. Y.) 578; State v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 25 Vt. 433.

3. Right of Private Individual to Operate Public Railroad. — Moran v. Ross, 79 Cal. 159; Lawrence v. Morgan's Louisiana, etc., R., etc., Co., 39 La. Ann. 427, 4 Am. St. Rep. 265; Ogdensburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Vermont, etc., R. Co., (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 16 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 249; Coe v. Columbus, etc., R. Co., 10 Ohio St. 372, 75 Am. Dec. 518; Junction R. Co. v. Ruggles, 7 Ohio St. 1; Middlebury Bank v. Edgerton, 30 Vt. 182.

In South Carolina private individuals were at one time allowed to own and operate railroads, but this has since been changed by statute. Jack v. Williams, 113 Fed. Rep. 823.

4. Railways Built and Owned by Government. — Jones v. Reg., 7 Can. Sup. Ct. 570; Isbester v. Reg., 7 Can. Sup. Ct. 696.

5. Railroad Owned by State. — East Tennessee, etc., R. Co. v. Nashville, etc., R. Co., (Tenn. Ch. 1897) 51 S. W. Rep. 202.

6. Municipal Corporations May Build and Operate. — Sun Printing, etc., Assoc. v. New York, 152 N. Y. 257; Walker v. Cincinnati, 21 Ohio St. 14, 8 Am. Rep. 24. But see Taylor v. Ross County, 23 Ohio St. 22.

7. Railroads Declared Public Highways by Constitution or Statute. — Lake Superior, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., 93 U. S. 442; Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. St. Joseph Terminal R. Co., 97 Mo. 457; Yates v. West Grafton, 34 W. Va. 783. And see the constitutions and statutes of the several states.

8. Railroads Not Highways in Ordinary Sense of Term. — Estes Park Toll Road Co. v. Edwards, 3 Colo. App. 74; Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Pence, 68 Ill. 524; Central Military Track R. Co. v. Rockafellow, 17 Ill. 541; Cox v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 48 Ind. 178; Clark v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 127 Mo. 197; Murch v. Concord R. Corp., 29 N. H. 9, 61 Am. Dec. 631; McGregor v. Erie R. Co., 35 N. J. L. 89.

Railroads Aided by Federal Government. — In Lake Superior, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., 93 U. S. 442, it was held that a provision in an act of Congress granting public lands in aid of a railroad, that such railroad should be a public highway for the use of the government, free from all tolls or other charges for transportation of its property or troops, gave to the government the free use of the road as a highway only, and did not entitle it to free transportation over such road in the cars of the railroad company.

No Easement of Light or Air over Right of Way. — Where a railroad is built through private property its right of way is not a public highway in the sense which entitles an adjoining lot-owner to an easement of light, air, or view over the same, and hence no damages are recoverable for an injury to light, air, or view resulting from the elevation of the company's tracks. Kotz v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 188 Ill. 578. And see the title LIGHT AND AIR, vol. 19, p. 112.

9. Railroads Quasi-public Highways. — Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Chicago, 140 Ill. 309; Railroad Com'rs v. Portland, etc., Cent. R. Co., 63 Me. 269, 18 Am. Rep. 208; Davidson v. Ramsey County, 18 Minn. 482; State v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 149 Mo. 104; McClellan v.

They are not highways, however, within the meaning of criminal statutes for the punishment of offenses committed in or near public thoroughfares.¹ Nor are they highways in such sense as to authorize their use by pedestrians,² or to entitle persons to travel on the cars of the company without payment of fare,³ or to exempt the land which they cover from special assessments for local improvements.⁴ Finally, it may be said that a private railroad is not a public highway in any sense of the term.⁵

2. Railroad Companies Quasi-public Corporations. — Strictly speaking, railroad companies are private as distinguished from public corporations,⁶ but from the status of railroads as public highways it follows that railroad corporations, although in some respects private, are not entirely so. Being possessed of extraordinary and unusual powers, they also assume special obligations involving great public interests, and therefore are more properly designated as quasi-public corporations or corporations affected with a public interest.⁷

3. Railroad Companies Common Carriers. — It is well settled that public rail-

Contrary View. — In Pierce v. Com., 104 Pa. St. 155, it was said: "We regard it as a misnomer to attach even the name quasi-public corporation to a railroad company, for it has none of the features of such corporations if we except its qualified right of eminent domain, and this it has because of the right reserved to the public to use its way for travel and transportation. Its officers are not public officers, and its business transactions are as private as those of a banking house. Its road may be called a quasi-public highway, but the company itself is a private corporation and nothing more."

road companies are common carriers.¹ Their duties as such have been fully discussed elsewhere, and do not fall within the scope of the present article.²

4. Railroad Public Use. — It is well established that a railroad is ordinarily a public use as regards the taking of private property by eminent domain,³ and also in the sense that a city may authorize it to use the public streets.⁴ That it is such a public use as to entitle it to other governmental aid has sometimes been questioned, but is now generally conceded.⁵

5. Railroads Not Ordinarily Legal Monopolies. — A railroad is not a legal monopoly unless it has been endowed with an exclusive franchise such as will prevent other persons and corporations from carrying on a similar business in the same territory.⁶

6. Railroads Not Agents or Representatives of State. — A railroad, although acting under an authority derived from the state, does not act, properly speaking, in behalf of the state or as its agent or representative.⁷

7. Railroads as Subjects of State and Federal Control. — As the construction and operation of a railroad is a business affected with a public interest, it follows that the legislatures of the several states may control and regulate railroad companies in the exercise of their franchises within the limits imposed by the state and federal constitutions.⁸ While the federal government has certain powers of control over what are known as the Pacific roads,⁹ it is held that the states are not deprived of their power to regulate railroads within their borders, as regards matters properly falling within the domain of state control, simply because of the fact that Congress aided in their construction.¹⁰

IV. RAILROAD CORPORATIONS — 1. Scope of Section. — The status of railroad corporations as private or public corporations has been seen in a preceding section.¹ The doctrines applicable to the creation, organization, ordinary incidents, powers and liabilities,² consolidation,³ dissolution,⁴ and reorganization⁵ of corporations generally are fully discussed in other articles of this work. These doctrines apply equally to railroad corporations, and a repetition has been deemed unnecessary. This section will be confined to the presentation of the principles peculiarly applicable to railroad corporations.

2. Creation and Organization. — a. IN GENERAL. — At an early period railroad corporations were created by special acts of legislature, by which charters were granted in which were enumerated the powers, duties, and liabilities of the corporation. But in order to secure uniformity in the powers conferred, to prevent the grant of special and exclusive privileges, and to secure to the state the right to alter, amend, or repeal the charter at pleasure, it has become an almost universal rule that such corporations are created by general laws, this rule being provided for by the constitutions of many of the states and by the statutes of others.⁶

b. MODE OF CREATION — (1) In General. — In the main, railroad corporations are controlled by the same legal principles, as regards the mode of creation and organization, as are other corporations.⁷

(2) Finding of Public Necessity for Road. — In some jurisdictions the charter will not be granted until it has been adjudged by designated authorities that public necessity and convenience require that the road should be erected.⁸

(3) Designation of Route and Termini. — As a general rule it is required that the articles of association shall designate the places from and to which the road is to be constructed, maintained, or operated, the name of each county through or into which the road is to pass, and the length of the line.⁹

This does not apply, however, to branch lines,¹ nor need switches, turnouts, or sidetracks be designated.²

Circular Road. — That the proposed road for which the charter is sought is to be a circular road, which, from its nature, cannot have termini, is not sufficient ground for refusing the charter.³

(4) Duration and Extension of Corporate Existence. — The duration and extension of the corporate existence of railroad corporations are subject to the same general rules applied to other corporations.⁴

c. ACCEPTANCE OF CHARTER. — The acceptance of the charter by the incorporators of a railroad company is as essential as in the case of corporations generally, and in both cases the legal principles controlling as to time, manner, place, and effect of acceptance are the same.⁵

Acceptance Presumed. — In the absence of provision that the charter shall be accepted in a particular manner,⁶ a railroad charter may be considered as presumptively accepted at its date, without any record evidence of the fact, when it appears that the grantees afterwards asked for and obtained amendments to their charter, and that they have constructed all of the road,⁷ or even where only a part has been constructed and operated.⁸

d. JUDICIAL NOTICE OF CHARTER. — The extent to which the courts will take judicial notice of the charters of railroad corporations has been fully treated elsewhere.⁹

e. AMENDMENT AND REPEAL — (1) In General. — A general treatment of the right to amend or repeal charters of corporations, the acceptance of the amendments and the manner of making them, has been given elsewhere in this work, and this section will be confined to a statement of such of the principles as are peculiarly applicable to railroad corporations.¹⁰

(2) Where Right to Amend or Repeal Has Not Been Reserved. — The legislature may regulate the mode in which railroad corporations shall transact their business, the price which they shall charge for the transportation of freight and passengers, the speed at which they may run their trains, and the way in which they may cross or run upon highways and turnpikes used for public travel. It may make all such regulations as are appropriate to protect the lives of persons carried upon railroads or passing upon highways crossed by railroads. To exercise this control it is not necessary that the power to alter and amend the charters of such corporations shall have been reserved.¹

(3) Where Right to Amend or Repeal Has Been Reserved. — Where, under the constitution or statutes, the power is reserved to alter or amend the charters of railroad corporations, the legislature may impose upon them such additional restrictions and burdens as the public good requires, short of confiscation of property.² Thus, under the power reserved to amend or repeal, the legislature may amend a charter provision allowing the corporation to select the location of its route, and may define the route to be followed;³ regulate the method of location;⁴ fix railroad charges for the transportation of passengers and freight within the state;⁵ require the railroads in a city to erect a union station and extend their tracks thereto;⁶ compel the making of suitable provision for passengers at a certain point;⁷ abolish grade crossings;⁸ compel the erection⁹ or widening¹⁰ of bridges over the right of way; enact statutes regulating the liability for the killing of stock,¹¹ and for injuries caused by fire.¹²

(4) Amendment under Police Power. — Though no power has been reserved to amend or repeal, the legislature may require railroad corporations to conform to such regulations of a police character as it may deem necessary to secure the rights of the citizens generally and most conducive to the quiet and good order and to the security of property.¹³ Thus, it may regulate the precautions to be exercised at crossings,¹⁴ the crossing of highways,¹⁵ the fencing of tracks,¹⁶ and make all similar regulations obviously pertaining to the police of railroad corporations and sensibly affecting the security of public travel.¹⁷

3. Domicil, Citizenship, and Residence. — The application of the general doctrine concerning the domicil, citizenship, and residence of corporations is the same where railroad corporations are involved as in the case of other corporations, and a full treatment of this subject has been presented elsewhere.¹⁸

The Residence of the Corporation is in the state where it was created,¹⁹ irrespective of the residence of the corporators.²⁰

where the road is operated or corporate powers exercised,¹ and in each county where it has an office, agency, or agent for services of process.²

4. Powers — a. IN GENERAL. — The powers of a railroad corporation are, like those of other corporations, measured by its charter, and it can lawfully exercise only those powers which are conferred upon it by its charter, either expressly or by implication.³ The rule that the corporation cannot engage in business other than that which it is authorized by its charter to conduct does not, however, prevent it from engaging in a business incidental to the carrying on of its principal business.⁴

b. CONSTRUCTION OF CHARTER. — The doctrine that the charter of the corporation is to be construed most strictly against the corporation and in favor of the public⁵ has been applied to railroads.⁶ In the case of railroads,⁷

9. Dissolution — a. IN GENERAL. — The various methods of dissolution and the effect of dissolution upon corporations, including railroad corporations, have been fully treated elsewhere.¹

b. JUDICIAL ASCERTAINMENT OF FORFEITURE. — In the case of railroad corporations, as of corporations generally, to determine whether a failure to comply with the conditions imposed by the act of incorporation ipso facto terminates the corporate existence or whether the forfeiture must be judicially ascertained, reference must be had to the terms of the particular statute.²

c. GROUNDS OF FORFEITURE — (1) In General. — Railroad corporations, like other corporations, are liable to forfeiture of their franchises for nonuse or abuse of their corporate franchises and powers, or for failure to perform corporate duties imposed upon them by their charters, either expressly or by implication.³

(2) Failure to Commence Construction Within Specified Time. — In some jurisdictions the statutes require that construction shall be commenced and a certain per cent. of the amount of the capital stock shall be expended thereon within a specified time.⁴

Where a Failure to Comply with This Provision entails a loss of corporate powers, construction and expenditure by a lessee of a portion of the route covered by the franchise cannot be considered in determining whether or not the statutory provisions have been complied with.⁵

(3) Failure to Complete Within Specified Time. — The act of incorporation generally contains a provision requiring that either the whole road or a certain portion thereof shall be completed in a specified time, the penalty for failure to comply therewith being a forfeiture of the charter. In some cases it has been held that under the terms of the particular act this provision was self-executing, and a failure to complete within the specified time worked a forfeiture without further proceedings.⁶ In others this has been held merely a ground for forfeiture.⁷

7. Provisions Held Not Self-executing. — See

(4) Suspension of Operation for Specified Time. — In some jurisdictions it is provided that the suspension by the corporation of its business for a specified time shall be ground for dissolution.¹ Where such provision exists, nonuser for a less period is not ground for forfeiture.² No explanation will avail to excuse a failure to exercise the corporate franchises where the suspension has continued for a period longer than that fixed by the statute.³

(5) Transfer of Property and Franchises. — The same general rule which applies to corporations generally, that a transfer of the corporate property does not ipso facto work the dissolution of the corporation,⁴ applies to railroad corporations.⁵ But the unauthorized sale of all,⁶ or a part, of the corporate franchises and property⁷ is ground for the dissolution of the corporation.

Nor Does a Lease of the Property and Franchises, though Unauthorized, work a dissolution⁸ of the corporation where such an act is sufficient ground to authorize a dissolution.⁹

d. FOREIGN CORPORATIONS. — While the franchises of a railroad corporation of a foreign state cannot be forfeited by the courts of another state, the latter may withdraw a franchise granting to the corporation the right to extend and operate its line in the state.¹⁰

e. COLLATERAL ATTACK. — A cause of forfeiture of the franchises of a railroad corporation cannot be taken advantage of collaterally,¹¹ but, in the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, must be enforced by the state in a direct proceeding instituted for that purpose.¹²

f. EFFECT OF DISSOLUTION. — The property of a railroad corporation and rights and privileges having the nature of property, such as its right of way, do not revert to the grantors of the corporation in case it forfeits its charter, but constitute assets to be administered for the benefit of its shareholders and creditors upon its dissolution.¹³

V. LOCATION OF ROAD — 1. In General — a. MEANING OF TERM. — The term "location," as used in railroad law, may refer to the line over which it is proposed to run the road after such line has been surveyed and fixed upon by the company, but before the acquisition of the land which it covers, or it may refer to the act of the company in selecting such line.¹⁴

Right of Way Does Not Revert upon Expiration of Term of Charter. — Terry v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., (Supm. Ct.) 67 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 439.

14. Meaning of Term "Location." — Hickey v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 6 Ill. App. 172; Matter of Niagara Falls, etc., R. Co., 46 Hun (N. Y.)

b. HOW ADOPTED. — The selection of its proposed line is made by the railroad company itself, generally by action of its board of directors.¹ Where the method of procedure is prescribed by a general statute its provisions will prevail over those of a special charter previously granted.²

c. DISCRETION OF COMPANY AS TO ROUTE AND TERMINI — (1) In General. — The selection of the route and termini of the proposed road may be left entirely to the discretion of the company incorporated to build it,³ or the exact location of the road may be prescribed by the charter,⁴ or power may be given the company to elect between several designated routes.⁵ In a majority of cases, however, the general termini and route are required to be stated in the articles of association or incorporation, the company being allowed to choose its location in other respects, including the precise termini and intermediate points.⁶

Amendment of Charter Taking Away Discretion. — A charter which confers power upon a railroad company to choose its own route between designated points may be so amended as to take away this discretion, at any time before the road is constructed.⁷

(2) Conformity to Prescribed Route. — Where the general termini of the road are stated in the articles of incorporation, or in the charter, it must be located with reasonable directness between the points thus designated.⁸ But it has 94; Williamsport, etc., R. Co. v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 141 Pa. St. 407.

The Term "Located" May Mean Located and Constructed, as, for example, when it is used in an agreement providing that damages for a right of way shall be assessed when the road has been located. Hoffman v. Bloomsburg, etc., R. Co., 157 Pa. St. 174.

"Located" in Sense of Constructed. — In Jewett v. Lawrenceburgh, etc., R. Co., 10 Ind. 539, a provision in a contract for subscription to stock that a railroad should be located within a certain distance of a named place was held to mean that it should be actually constructed within that distance.

1. Line Adopted by Railroad Company through Board of Directors. — Williamsport, etc., R. Co. v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 141 Pa. St. 407; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Dunbar, 100 Ill. 110.

Delegation of Power. — Where the duty of location is imposed by statute upon the president and directors of a railroad company they cannot delegate such duty to a committee of the corporation. Weidenfeld v. Sugar Run R. Co., 48 Fed. Rep. 675.

A Jury in Condemnation Proceedings has no power to determine the route of the railroad. New Orleans, etc., R. Co. v. Robertson, 34 La. Ann. 865.

2. Bangor, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, 47 Me. 34.

3. Route and Termini in Discretion of Company. — Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Dunbar, 100 Ill. 110; Hickey v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 6 Ill. App. 172.

The location of a railroad should be such as best to serve the interests both of the shareholders and of the public. Bestor v. Wathen, 60 Ill. 138.

4. Exact Location Prescribed by Charter. — Matter of Coney Island, etc., R. Co., 12 Hun (N. Y.) 451.

5. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Louisville City R. Co., 2 Duv. (Ky.) 175, holding that a railroad company empowered to choose between several routes could not complain that one of the routes which it had not adopted or had abandoned was used by another company.

6. See supra, IV. 2. b. (3) Designation of Route and Termini.

Feasibility of Route as Influencing Location. — Where the legislature authorizes the construction of a railroad between two designated points, no intermediate point being named, if the routes between said points are equally feasible, the most direct should be adopted, but where there is a difference in the feasibility of the routes some reasonable discretion must be allowed in the selection of that to be followed. Newcastle, etc., R. Co. v. Peru, etc., R. Co., 3 Ind. 464.

Under the General Railroad Law of New York the particular route of the proposed road is not left to the discretion of the corporation, but is to be determined by the proceedings and in the manner prescribed in the act. The filing of the profile and map required by the act is not the location of the route, but the proposal of one, which may or may not become the actual route as shall be determined by the subsequent proceedings. Matter of Long Island R. Co., 45 N. Y. 364; Rochester, etc., R. Co. v. New York, etc., R. Co., 44 Hun (N. Y.) 206.

7. Macon, etc., R. Co. v. Gibson, 85 Ga. 1, 21 Am. St. Rep. 135, holding that such right to amend existed notwithstanding the fact that the railroad company had entered into an executory contract for the construction of its road.

8. Reasonable Directness Between Termini Required. — Leverett v. Middle Georgia, etc., R. Co., 96 Ga. 385; Savannah, etc., R. Co. v. Shiels, 33 Ga. 601; People v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 120 Ill. 48; Atty.-Gen. v. Erie, etc., R. Co., 55 Mich. 15; McRoberts v. Southern Minnesota R. Co., 18 Minn. 108; Warren, etc., R. Co. v. Clarion Land, etc., Co., 54 Pa. St. 28; Great Western R. Co. v. Preston, etc., R. Co., 17 U. C. Q. B. 477.

"Where the terminus of a railway is under the terms of its charter, there it necessarily ends, in fact as well as in law; and the fact that the company may be authorized to construct and operate a railway beyond that

been held that all railroad charters which do not directly express the contrary must be taken to allow the exercise of such a discretion in the location of the route as is incident to an ordinary practical survey of the same, made with reference to the nature of the country to be passed over and the obstacles to be encountered or avoided.¹ And where a railroad company acts in good faith, and within the limitations of the powers conferred upon it, the courts will not review its exercise of discretion in locating its road between the termini prescribed by law.²

Stock Subscriptions Released by Material Deviation. — A material deviation by a railroad from the route prescribed in its charter amounts to a breach of contract with subscribers to the stock of the company who have not consented thereto.³

A Variation in One Part of the Line from the route fixed by statute does not render void the entire location, so as to entitle a party through whose land the line is properly located to sue for damages.⁴

Who May Complain of Deviation. — One railroad company may not complain that another company, authorized to build a road between the same termini, has deviated from the route prescribed, unless it can show a particular injury to itself from such deviation.⁵

(3) Construction of Charter Provisions. — Charter provisions as to the route and termini of a proposed railroad are to be reasonably interpreted with due regard to the circumstances of each particular case.⁶ As a general rule, a terminus cannot make the two one." Per Stayton, J., in Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Gay, 86 Tex. 571.

Penalty for Deviation from Charter Route. — See State v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 12 Gill & J. (Md.) 399, 38 Am. Dec. 317.

Where a Number of Intermediate Points Are Designated, the road need not be located through such points in the order named. Com. v. Fitchburg R. Co., 8 Cush. (Mass.) 240.

1. Deviation Necessitated by Nature of Country. — Southern Minnesota R. Co. v. Stoddard, 6 Minn. 150. And see McRoberts v. Southern Minnesota R. Co., 18 Minn. 108.

2. Exercise of Discretion Not Reviewed unless Abused. — Bonaparte v. Camden, etc., R. Co., Baldw. (U. S.) 205; Hentz v. Long Island R. Co., 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 646; Walker v. Mad River, etc., R. Co., 8 Ohio 38; Pennsylvania R. Co.'s Appeal, 116 Pa. St. 55; Struthers v. Dunkirk, etc., R. Co., 87 Pa. St. 282; Parke's Appeal, 64 Pa. St. 137; Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Speer, 56 Pa. St. 325, 94 Am. Dec. 84; Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Erie, 27 Pa. St. 380; Ans-pach v. Mahanoy, etc., R. Co., 5 Phila. (Pa.) 491, 21 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 212.

Where the Charter Fixes One Terminus At or Near a Certain Point, a considerable discretion is conferred upon the company. Fall River Iron Works Co. v. Old Colony, etc., R. Co., 5 Allen (Mass.) 221; Parke's Appeal, 64 Pa. St. 137.

Track Built by City. — Where a city empowered to construct a track for the use of several railroad companies has built the same in a certain place, the court will not interfere with its exercise of discretion, nor determine whether or not a track in another place would be more convenient. Rice, etc., Mach., etc., Co. v. Worcester, 130 Mass. 575.

3. Champion v. Memphis, etc., R. Co., 35 Miss. 692.

A Slight Deviation from the charter route will not release a dissenting subscriber. Whether or not the deviation is material must depend upon the circumstances of each particular case. Champion v. Memphis, etc., R. Co., 35 Miss. 692.

Held No Defense to Action on Subscription Contract. — In Mississippi, etc., R. Co. v. Cross, 20 Ark. 443, it was held that while a departure from the charter route constituted a violation of the charter for which the company's franchises might be seized on quo warranto, or which a subscriber to stock might enjoin, it did not constitute a defense to an action by the company on the subscription contract.

4. Newton v. Agricultural Branch R. Corp., 15 Gray (Mass.) 27. And to the same effect see Lee v. Milner, 2 Y. & Coll. Exch. 611.

5. Erie R. Co. v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., 21 N. J. Eq. 283.

6. Use of Word "Shore." — Where the certificate of incorporation provided that the road should commence "at some convenient and eligible point upon the western shore of the Hudson river," it was held that the word "shore" was not used in its strictest sense to mean the land between the limits of ordinary high and low water, but in the more extended and popular sense. State v. Hudson Tunnel R. Co., 38 N. J. L. 548.

"To the Place of Shipping Lumber." — In Peavey v. Calais R. Co., 30 Me. 498, it was held that a charter authorizing the construction of a railroad "to the place of shipping lumber" authorized the company to build its road to a point of convenient shipment.

Provisions Relating to Terminus and Not to Route. — Where the charter of a railroad provided that one terminus of the road should be fixed at some point south of a named street, it was held that the company might locate its road through such street, as such charter provision did not relate to the route, but to the termination of the road. McFarland v. Orange, etc., Horse Car R. Co., 13 N. J. Eq. 17.

Not Limited to Terminus of Another Road. — Where a statute authorized a railroad to build railroad company authorized by its charter to build its road "from" or "to" a certain city or town may locate one terminus thereof within the limits of such city or town.¹ Similarly, a charter fixing the terminus of the road "at or near" a named avenue authorizes the company to extend its road to the centre of the avenue.² But while the right to cross a navigable stream lying between the termini designated in the charter will be implied where such crossing is essential to the construction of the railroad,³ it has been held that power to build a railroad to a river does not include power to cross the river.⁴

Terminus Indicated by Name of Company. — The name of the railroad company may be referred to for the purpose of determining its terminus.⁵

Conflict Between Charter and Map Filed. — The fact that the line of a railroad as designated on a map filed by the company stops short of the point named in the charter as the terminus of the road is not conclusive. While the map is decisive on a question of route, it cannot work a change of the termini or an abandonment of a portion of the authorized road.⁶

d. DESCRIPTION OF LOCATION — MAPS, PLANS, AND SURVEYS — (1) Necessity to File. — Railroad companies are generally required by statute to file written descriptions of their locations, together with maps, plans, and surveys thereof, with some designated public officer.⁷ In some jurisdictions the filing of such papers constitutes a condition precedent to the condemnation of land by the company,⁸ while in others condemnation proceedings may be commenced before such papers are filed.⁹ A railroad right of way its road from a certain point to any point on the northern boundary of certain counties, and there to connect with any railroad constructed or to be constructed, it was held that the company had power to fix its terminus at any point in the boundary named which it might select, and that it was not limited to the terminus of another railroad. Com. v. Cross Cut R. Co., 53 Pa. St. 62.

1. "From" or "To" Gives Authority to Enter Limits. — Colorado Eastern R. Co. v. Union Pac. R. Co., 41 Fed. Rep. 293; Waycross Air-Line R. Co. v. Offerman, etc., R. Co., 109 Ga. 827; Ligare v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 166 Ill. 240; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 112 Ill. 589; Moses v. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co., 21 Ill. 516; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Hannibal Union Depot Co., 125 Mo. 82; Mason v. Brooklyn City, etc., R. Co., 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 373; Mohawk Bridge Co. v. Utica, etc., R. Co., 6 Paige (N. Y.) 554; Western Pennsylvania R. Co.'s Appeal, 99 Pa. St. 155; Rio Grande R. Co. v. Brownsville, 45 Tex. 88. But to the contrary, see Augusta v. Port Royal, etc., R. Co., 74 Ga. 658; Macon v. Macon, etc., R. Co., 7 Ga. 221; North-Eastern R. Co. v. Payne, 8 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 177.

Where a railroad company has power, under its charter, to enter a city, the fact that it builds its road from a point on the city line, and for a time operates it from that point, does not prevent it from subsequently entering the city, if it appears that the original location was intended to be temporary merely. *Colorado Eastern R. over the public lands of the United States is not perfected until a plat of the location of the road is filed in the proper land office.¹

(2) Requisites and Sufficiency. — The description filed must, either by itself or in connection with the maps and plans, clearly show the lines and direction of the proposed road, the quantity of land to be taken, and the names of the owners.² Plans or maps filed with the written location may be referred to for the purpose of explaining but not for the purpose of varying or modifying it.³ Insufficiency of description may be cured by the subsequent building of the road with the acquiescence of the landowner.⁴

(3) Effect of Failure to File. — As a general rule, failure to file the required maps and plans does not constitute ground for a forfeiture of the company's charter.⁵

(4) Where Location of Road Is Changed. — Where the location of a railroad is changed in such a manner as to necessitate the condemnation of additional land, a plan of the alteration must also be filed.⁶

(5) Duty of Purchasing Company to Refile Location. — A company which purchases a railroad already constructed is not required to refile a map of the same.⁷

(6) Approval by Public Officials. — In some jurisdictions the location or plan filed must also be approved by the officers with whom it is filed.⁸

(7) Notice to Landowners. — In New York a railroad company, after filing the map and profile of its proposed road, must give written notice of such filing to all occupants of land over which the route of its road is designated, and which has not been purchased by or given to the company. Until this is done there can be no location of the route within the sense and meaning of the general railroad law.⁹

Contra — Filing of Map Not Essential. — It is not necessary for a railroad company which has filed its articles of incorporation and proofs of organization, and constructed a road over unsurveyed public lands, to file a map of definite location in order to entitle it to the benefit of an act of Congress granting it a right of way over the public lands of the United States. *Denver, etc., R. of railroad lines at particular places are not void per se as against public policy,¹ but they are illegal where calculated to prejudice the interests of the public, or of the shareholders of the road,² or where they provide for private emolument to the officers of the road who are intrusted with the duty of choosing its location.³

By Whom Made. — It has been held that the attorneys, agents, or managing officers of a railroad company cannot bind it by entering into agreements with landowners regarding the location of the road without notice to the directors of the company.⁴

Parol Evidence Not Admissible to Vary Contract. — The general rule that parol evidence is not admissible to explain or vary written contracts which are plain and unambiguous applies to contracts concerning the location of railroads.⁵

3. Parallel Locations. — Questions relating to the exclusiveness of railroad franchises and the impairment of vested rights by the incorporation of companies for the construction of competing or parallel lines have been considered in another part of the present article.⁶ Aside from questions of this nature, however, questions may also arise as to the right of railroad companies to locate their proposed roads in such a manner as to parallel existing roads or locations. Thus, in Georgia it is provided by statute that the general direction and location of a new railroad, except within ten miles of its terminal points, must be at least ten miles from any railroad already constructed or laid out between the same points.⁷ And in New York it has been held that the fact that a proposed road, for all practical purposes, parallels existing roads, and will have a tendency to destroy and impair vested property rights, without any material benefit resulting therefrom, justifies the railroad commissioners in refusing to grant a certificate as to the necessity of the road.⁸

4. Extensions — Power to Build. — Every railroad company has implied power to make such short extensions of its road beyond its terminal stations as may be reasonable and necessary for the transaction of its business and the accommodation of the public.⁹ Extensions, however, which materially change the route of the road cannot be made unless authorized by the general railroad law of the state,¹⁰ or by some special act of the legislature.¹¹ Power to build Extension Authorized by General Railroad Law. — Florida Cent., etc., R. Co. v. Bell, (Fla. 1901) 31 So. Rep. 259.

11. Compliance with Statute Essential. — Where a statute authorizing a railroad company to extend its road contains several provisos, the branch roads has sometimes been construed as power to extend the main line,¹ while in other cases it has been held that power to extend a road can be exercised only by building the extension from one of the original termini.²

Consent of Stockholders. — As the building of an extension is an enterprise radically different from the building of the original road, it follows that the consent of the company's stockholders is essential thereto, even though the extension is authorized by statute; and where such consent is withheld the company may be restrained from acting under the statute, or from expending any money in extending the road.³

Time of Building. — While individuals may resist the condemnation of their lands for a right of way after the expiration of the time given by the charter for the completion of the road,⁴ they cannot interfere to prevent the company from extending its road, after the expiration of that time, over a right of way already acquired.⁵

5. Changes of Location — a. POWER TO CHANGE — In General. — It is generally held that where a railroad company to which has been given the power to choose its particular route between designated termini has exercised its discretion in this regard, its power of choice is exhausted,⁶ and it cannot subsequently change its location or route without express legislative authority.⁷ Thus, a change cannot be made for reasons of convenience, or expediency, or economy merely;⁸ nor is such change authorized by the mere fact that the use of the railroad, and also of a neighboring highway, has so increased since the building of the road as to make travel on the highway more dangerous.⁹

extension must be made in a manner consistent with all of these provisos unless they are repugnant. Packer v. Sunbury, etc., R. Co., 19 Pa. St. 211.

3. Consent of Stockholders Essential. — Zabriskie v. Hackensack, etc., R. Co., 18 N. J. Eq. 178, 90 Am. Dec. 617.

Right to Apply Specific Funds to Extension of Road. — In Stevens v. Rutland, etc., R. Co., 29 Vt. 545, a railroad company was enjoined from applying its present funds or its income and from pledging its credit for the purpose of extending the road, but the court refused to enjoin it from building the extension with any new funds which might be obtained for that specific purpose.

Subscriptions Made After Grant of Power to Extend. — Persons who subscribe to the stock of a railroad company subsequently to the enactment of a statute authorizing the extension of the road, do so with notice of the statutory power of the company, and an extension afterwards built under authority of the statute does not invalidate their subscription. Jewett v. Valley R. Co., 34 Ohio St. 601.

Authority to change the location may be given, however, by the charter of the company, or by other special enactment,¹ or by the general railroad law of the state;² or the authorities of counties, cities, and towns may be empowered by law to contract with railroad companies for changes in the location of railroads within their limits.³

In Colorado it has been held that a railroad company may change the termini of its road, after the same has been built, under the general law authorizing such companies to alter or amend their articles of association.⁴

In Massachusetts a railroad company may vary the location of its road at any time after the expiration of one year from the filing of such location with the county commissioners, and before the time prescribed for completion of the road has expired.⁵

In New York the general railroad law provides that after a railroad company has filed the required map and profile of its road any owner or occupant of land over which the designated route runs, who is aggrieved by the proposed location, may apply by petition to a justice of the supreme court for the appointment of commissioners to examine the route with a view to altering the same.⁶ And by another section of the same law it is provided that a railroad company may, by a vote of two-thirds of its directors, alter its route or termini, or locate such route or termini in a county adjoining any county named in its certificate of incorporation, if it shall appear that the line can be improved thereby.⁷ The route of a railroad cannot be changed, however, under that section of the general corporation law which authorizes the correction of mistakes and informalities in articles of incorporation.⁸

In Ohio changes in the route or termini of a railroad which will result in the abandonment of the road, either partly or completely built, are prohibited by statute.⁹

In Pennsylvania the weight of authority is to the effect that a railroad company may change the location of its road at any time before the damages in condemnation proceedings are assessed, and before the road is constructed.¹

b. STATUTES AUTHORIZING CHANGE STRICTLY CONSTRUED. — Statutes authorizing changes in the location of railroads are to be construed strictly.² Thus, a statute authorizing a railroad to change its route gives it no authority to change its termini.³ Likewise, where the charter specifies certain causes for which the route may be changed, it cannot be changed for any cause not specified.⁴ And where the authority conferred is to change its location on account of difficulty of construction, the change cannot be made after the road has been completed.⁵

c. BY WHOM MADE. — Power conferred upon a railroad company to change its location is generally to be exercised by vote of its board of directors.⁶

d. EFFECT OF CHANGE. — Variations in the route over which a railroad may run, when authorized by statute, do not affect the identity of the corporate body that builds the road so as to deprive it of a right to exemption from taxation granted in the original charter.⁷ But a company which has received donations of land or money with the understanding that it shall locate its road through certain points cannot change its location without making due compensation to the parties from whom such donations were received.⁸ Nor can a vested right to land damages, awarded in condemnation proceedings, be divested by a subsequent statute authorizing a railroad company to change its location.⁹

Release of Subscribers to Stock. — By the weight of authority a change in the termini of a road is such a fundamental alteration in the purposes of the incorporation as to release nonassenting subscribers to stock.¹⁰

e. CHANGE OF TRACK WITHIN LIMITS OF RIGHT OF WAY. — A railroad company may lay its track on any part of its right of way that it chooses,¹¹ and may, it seems, subsequently change its location within such limits without special grant of authority.¹²

6. Conflicting Locations. — Where grants of a definite location are inconsistent the earlier one will prevail,¹³ but where the grants are indefinite, leaving the exact routes to be selected by the companies, the prior right will attach to the company which first locates its road.¹ Land once located by a company, which is proceeding in good faith and with reasonable diligence in the construction of its road, cannot be taken from it and appropriated by another company for railroad purposes, without the consent of the legislature.² But one railroad company may be authorized by statute to use a portion of the location of another company, either generally³ or with the consent of the latter company.⁴ Where the nature of the country is such that it is impracticable or impossible to lay down more than one track over a portion of the route followed by two companies, a court of equity, while recognizing the prior title of the company first locating its road, will compel it to allow the other company to make a reasonable use of its tracks.⁵

authority is given for the formation of connections between railroads, the company cannot bind the state and those acting under the authority thereof by any agreement or covenant prohibiting the making of such connection, though it may possibly bind itself.¹

Connection Compelled under Police Power. — In a proper case the legislature may, by virtue of the police power, compel the formation of connection with railroads whose tracks cross or meet each other; and such a regulation will not be unconstitutional as a taking of property without the payment of due compensation.²

b. NATURE AND EXTENT OF RIGHT. — Where the statute merely grants authority to one road to connect with another, the right so granted is a revocable license,³ or a privilege, and not a contract. Its exercise is a matter of election, as is also the discontinuance of the connection.⁴ In some instances a general grant of power to connect with any other railroad is given.⁵ This does not, however, authorize connection with roads subsequently constructed.⁶ This authority to connect has reference to a physical union of the tracks of the two lines, and is not intended to provide for an interchange of business.⁷

When Right to Connect Vests. — Where the connection is authorized by statute the rights of the connecting line thereunder do not vest until the election to connect is made; and if the statute authorizing the connection is repealed before the acceptance of its terms a subsequent acceptance is of no effect.⁸ The mere fact that a railway company authorized by statute to connect at its option with one of two companies uses the line of one company while its line connecting with the other is in the course of construction is not sufficient to show that it has elected to connect with the former.⁹

c. ENFORCEMENT OF STATUTORY RIGHT. — Where the right to connect is granted by statute the railroad desiring the connection cannot simply enter on the right of way of the other, where they are unable to agree, but must pursue the methods prescribed by the statute.¹⁰ In some jurisdictions the right is enforceable by eminent domain proceedings.¹¹

d. ENFORCEMENT OF CONTRACT. — If the connection is made under and by force of a contract its continuance will in certain cases be enforced in equity, but equity will not aid if the contract for the connection has already been terminated.¹²

e. MANNER OF MAKING CONNECTION — In General. — In some jurisdictions the statute provides that the point, manner, and terms upon which the connection shall be made shall be determined by commissioners appointed for that purpose.¹³ In other jurisdictions these details are determined by a jury.

This jury, however, has nothing to do with carrying out the purpose of the connection, nor can it order one road to transfer to the other any portion of its property or franchise.¹

Point of Connection. — Where the statute designates the point of connection it is not required that the connection shall be made at the exact point so designated, but a reasonable discretion may be exercised, and the connection may be placed at the nearest practicable point of connection.² The line seeking the connection cannot, in the absence of statutory provision, select its own point of connection, but this power rests with the road with which connection is sought.³

f. SEVERING CONNECTION. — Where the terms of the statute are such that a connecting road cannot, at its own election, withdraw a connection once made, it seems, nevertheless, that the legislature may authorize it to disconnect.⁴

8. Property in Location. — The mere filing of the survey of a railroad does not give the company title to the land covered thereby.⁵ In New York the effect of the map filed by the company is to give warning to other railroads that a certain route has been pre-empted, but such map establishes no right as against the state so as to entitle the company filing it to compensation if the land is subsequently taken for another public use.⁶

9. Abandonment or Forfeiture of Location. — In Connecticut a railroad location is forfeited where the company fails to pay for all land covered thereby within twelve months of the acceptance of the route by the railroad commissioners.⁷ In Pennsylvania it has been held that the question of abandonment or forfeiture can be raised by the state alone, and not by a rival railroad company.⁸

VI. RIGHT OF WAY—1. General Power of Railroad Companies to Acquire Land. — The general power of railroad companies, including foreign corporations, to acquire land, and the purposes for which they may acquire it, have been fully treated elsewhere.⁹

2. Methods of Acquisition in General — With Consent of Owner or by Condemnation. — The two general methods of acquiring the right to enter, use, and occupy lands for a railroad right of way are with the consent of the owner or by condemnation.¹⁰ Under the term "consent of the owner," in this connection, may be included acquisition by public grant from a state or from the United States,¹¹ by private grant¹² or donation,¹³ by adverse possession or prescription,¹ by reservation in a deed by the company conveying other lands,² or by contract for the exchange of lands.³ The company is not obliged to procure its whole right of way by any one of these methods exclusively, but may acquire a part thereof by one method and the remainder by another.⁴

Rights Acquired under Lease. — The right to lay and maintain railroad tracks across a certain tract of land for a specified term may also arise under a lease.⁵

Acquisition by Dedication. — By the weight of authority, a railroad company cannot acquire a right of way by dedication in the proper sense of the term.⁶

3. Acquisition by Right of Eminent Domain. — The principles relating to the acquisition of rights of way by railroad companies through condemnation proceedings, in the exercise of the right of eminent domain, have been fully treated elsewhere.⁷

4. Acquisition by Purchase — a. IN GENERAL. — It is well settled that a railroad company may acquire its right of way by purchase as well as by exercise of the right of eminent domain.⁸ A grant of a right of way finds a valuable consideration in the benefit to the grantor's land arising from the Use of Land Other than That Donated. — Where the railroad company builds its road across a tract of land other than that donated to it by the owner, the latter may proceed for land damages under the statute. He is not estopped from such proceeding by representations and a tender of the land, made by a committee of citizens, with the understanding that he consented to the same, in the absence of proof that such committee was authorized to act as his agent. *Chicago, etc., R. construction of the road,¹ or in the promise of the company to erect a depot,² or to give to the grantor a free pass over the road.³ In the absence of statute no one other than the owner of the fee can convey a right of way to a railroad. A deed from a mere intruder is void.⁴ Where the title acquired by purchase is defective, but the company has entered upon the land and constructed its road, a perfect title may subsequently be acquired by an exercise of the right of eminent domain.⁵

Construction of Grants. — A conveyance of a right of way to a railroad company is to be construed reasonably, and in the light of surrounding circumstances.⁶

Vendor's Lien. — A person who conveys a right of way to a railroad has a lien on the road for the purchase price,⁷ and also for the company's failure to comply with the provisions of the contract of sale.⁸

Contract Contrary to Public Policy. — A contract by a railroad company for a right of way, the plain purpose of which is to secure for itself the sole access to certain places to the exclusion of all other railroads, being contrary to the policy of the law, will not be upheld.⁹

b. CONTRACT FOR CONVEYANCE. — A railroad company may also enter into a contract or agreement for a conveyance of a right of way.¹⁰ Such a contract is binding upon the landowner where the company has acted there-

A Company Which Has Not Secured Its Charter, nor filed its articles of association, has no power to enter into such a contract. Gage v. Newmarket R. Co., 18 Q. B. 457, 83 E. C. L. 457; Boston, etc., R. Co. v. Babcock, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 228.

Statements by the Landowner to a Committee of Citizens, who are not acting as agents of the company, of the conditions upon which he will grant a right of way to the company, do not constitute a contract to convey such right of way. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Estes, 71 Iowa 603.

upon by entering and constructing its road,¹ and, in a proper case, may be specifically enforced in equity.² In case of a breach of the contract by the railroad company the remedy of the landowner is by an action at law for damages.³

c. RESERVATIONS IN GRANTS. — Reservations embodied in conveyances of rights of way to railroad companies are to be construed in accordance with the general rules governing the construction of exceptions and reservations in deeds.⁴

d. CONDITIONS AND COVENANTS IN GRANTS. — A grant of a right of way to a railroad company may be upon condition, either precedent or subsequent,⁵ or may contain certain covenants and agreements on the part of the company, those most frequently met with being covenants to make and maintain crossings,⁶ or to erect and maintain depots.⁷ Such conditions are binding upon the railroad company as long as it retains and uses the land granted,⁸ and in the case of covenants running with the land the successors of

Contract Procured by Assignment After Construction of Road. — Where a railroad company appropriates land under the power of eminent domain, and builds its road thereon without reference to any contract for the conveyance of a right of way, it cannot defeat the landowner's right to the assessed damages by setting up a contract for conveyance which it has obtained by assignment from another company since the building of its road. Oregon R., etc., Co. v. Day, 3 Wash. pleasure of the licensor,¹ unless coupled with an interest.² Where the railroad company has made expensive improvements of a permanent character, so that a revocation would act as a fraud upon it, equity will enforce the license against the landowner,³ or will at least restrain the revocation until condemnation proceedings can be had.⁴

6. Acquisition by Implied Grant. — The accepted doctrine, in most jurisdictions, now is that where a railroad company proceeds to build its road upon land to which it has not acquired title by condemnation or conveyance, the owner may have his action for damages or for the value of the land,⁵ or may maintain ejectment or other possessory action,⁶ or may enjoin the company from appropriating or using such land, provided he proceeds with reasonable promptitude;¹ but that if the owner stands by and acquiesces, until the company has expended its money and constructed its road across his land, and until the road at that point has become a part of its railroad line, whereby the public, as well as the company, has acquired an interest in the maintenance of the enterprise, he forfeits every remedy except that of an action for compensation or damages. In such a case the railroad company is said to acquire its right of way by implied grant.²

7. Width and Location of Right of Way.—The width of the right of way which a railroad company may acquire by condemnation proceedings is generally fixed by statute.³ Where the land is acquired by purchase, the deed or agreement may definitely fix the width of the strip conveyed, in which case the company will not be allowed to take a greater width,⁴ or the extent of the land to be taken, within certain limits, may be left to the discretion of the company.⁵ According to some decisions, where no width is specified in the conveyance, it will be presumed that the strip conveyed is of the statutory width, which might have been acquired under the right of eminent domain.¹

Parol Evidence of the contemporaneous acts and declarations of the parties is admissible to fix the width of a right of way where the deed conveying the same is ambiguous or uncertain.²

Where the Land Is Acquired by Adverse Possession its width is limited to that occupied by the company during the prescriptive period.³

Location of Right of Way. — Where the deed conveying a right of way is indefinite as regards the location of the strip conveyed, the question is to be determined by an application of the general rules governing the construction of such instruments, due regard being had to the intent of the parties.⁴ In case of a deed conveying a strip through a certain tract of land, with no further description, the company has the right to choose its exact location,⁵ and no established right of way is acquired until the road is so located.⁶ The charter of the company may be referred to for the purpose of determining the location of its right of way.⁷ Boundaries fixed by a deed conveying the right of way do not shift with subsequent changes in the location of the track.⁸

8. Estate or Interest Acquired — a. BY EMINENT DOMAIN. — As a general rule a railroad company which acquires its right of way under the right of eminent domain takes an easement only, although in the absence of constitutional provisions to the contrary it may be authorized by statute to acquire a title in fee simple.⁹

b. BY PURCHASE OR AGREEMENT. — Likewise, where the land is obtained by purchase or agreement, the company generally takes an easement only,¹⁰

Grant of Right to Take As Much Land As Is Necessary. — Nashville, etc., R. Co. v. Central Land Co., (Tenn. Ch. 1897) 48 S. W. Rep. 110; Nashville, etc., R. Co. v. McReynolds, (Tenn. Ch. 1898) 48 S. W. Rep. 258.

Grant of Land "Not Exceeding One Hundred Feet in Width." — Where a company, acting under a grant of a right of way not to exceed one hundred feet in width, occupies a narrower strip for a number of years, it cannot subsequently eject persons who have occupied land adjoining such strip with its acquiescence and under another deed from the landowner. Vicksburg, etc., R. Co. v. Barrett, 67 Miss. 579.

1. Statutory Width Presumed. — Prather v. Western Union Tel. Co., 89 Ind. 501; Jones v. Erie, etc., R. Co., 144 Pa. St. 629; Delaware, etc., R. Co. v. Newton Coal Min. Co., 6 Kulp (Pa.) 21; Nashville, etc., R. Co. v. McReynolds, (Tenn. Ch. 1898) 48 S. W. Rep. 258. But to the contrary see Nashville, etc., R. Co. v. Hammond, 104 Ala. 191; Ft. Wayne, etc., R. Co. v. Sherry, 126 Ind. 334.

A Company Which Elects to Take Less than the Statutory Width cannot subsequently condemn a greater quantity as against a rival company which has purchased the land in question. Joplin, etc., R. Co. v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 135 Mo. 549. And see Mooney v. Rome R. Co., 76 Ga. 749.

though it may acquire a title in fee when authorized by statute.¹ Whether it acquires a fee or simply an easement generally depends upon the terms of the conveyance or contract.² Thus, a deed which in terms conveys a "right of way" will be held to pass an easement;³ and the same is true of a deed which conveys the land for railroad purposes only and provides for reverter to the grantor in case it is not used for such purposes.⁴ In some cases, however, it has been held that the company only acquires an easement, even though the deed purports to convey a fee,⁵ or though the agreement to convey provides for the execution of such a deed by the grantor.⁶

Easement a Perpetual One. — The easement acquired for a right of way is generally unlimited as to time, and continues until terminated by release or abandonment.⁷

Right Exclusive as to Possession and Use. — A railroad company is entitled to the exclusive possession and use of its roadbed and right of way,⁸ and interference with this right, either by individuals or by other railroad corporations, may be restrained in equity.⁹ The owner of the fee may use his land in any manner which is not inconsistent with the rights of the railroad company,¹⁰ but any acts of his which tend to embarrass the company in the operation of the road will render him liable as a trespasser.¹¹

Purposes for Which Right of Way May Be Used. — Where the company has title in fee to its right of way, it may use the same in any manner which a private individual could use his own land.¹ And in general it may be stated that a railroad right of way acquired by grant may be put to any use which is essential or convenient to the proper operation of the road,² but that it cannot be used for other than railroad purposes,³ or in any manner inconsistent with the terms of the grant.⁴

Land Acquired Subject to Inchoate Interests and Liens. — The company takes the land subject to all inchoate interests and liens existing at the time of the conveyance.⁵

c. BY PRESCRIPTION. — Where the right of way is acquired by prescription, the company takes an easement only.⁶

d. BY LICENSE. — Where the road is built under a mere license from the landowner, the company does not even acquire an easement.⁷

9. Alienation by Company. — The general power of quasi-public corporations to alienate their property has been treated to some extent in other connections.⁸ When authorized by the legislature one railroad company may assign or convey its right of way to another;⁹ and in some cases conveyances to private persons¹⁰ or to corporations other than railroad companies have been upheld.¹¹ But if the consideration for the grant of the right of way was the construction of a road running in a certain direction, such right of way cannot be transferred to a company which proposes to build a line in a different direction.¹² Nor can a railroad company which is operating a road upon a portion of its right of way convey the remainder to another company so as to authorize the operation of two independent roads thereon, without the consent of the landowner, or without compensation to him for the additional burden.¹³

10. Conveyance of Part of Right of Way to Private Individual held valid as against the company. McDonald v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 28 U. C. Q. B. 320.

Release to Owner of Land. — A railroad corporation, having an easement for right of way, when no longer needed for its purposes, can release the same to the owner of the land. Flaten v. Moorhead City, 58 Minn. 324.

11. Lease of Part of Right of Way to Manufacturing Corporation held valid. Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Bullard, 120 Mich. 416.

12. Crosbie v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 62 Iowa 189.

13. Blakely v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 46 Neb.

10. Abandonment or Forfeiture — In General. — The question of abandonment of a railroad right of way is always one of intent. Nonuser alone does not constitute abandonment, although it may furnish evidence thereof. In the absence of adverse possession by the servient owner, or acts of such unequivocal nature on the part of the railroad company as evince a clear intention to abandon the easement, nonuser will not work an extinguishment of the right.¹ Abandonment is usually and properly shown by acts which do not appear of record, and it need not appear of record in order to be effectual.² Whether or not an abandonment has occurred in a given case is a question for the jury in an action of ejectment against the company.³

Misuse of Its Easement by the railroad company does not operate as an abandonment, although it may give the landowner a right to damages.⁴

A Transfer of the Rights of the Original Railroad Company to another company does not amount to an abandonment of the right of way of which the landowner can take advantage.⁵

Permissive Occupancy of Land by Original Owner. — A railroad does not lose its right of way by permitting the landowner to occupy a part of the same, for a time, while it is not needed for the purposes of the road.⁶

Forfeiture for Failure to Complete Road on Time. — A forfeiture of a railroad right of way may take place on failure of the company to complete its road within the time limited by statute.⁷

6. Effect of Permissive Occupancy by Original Owner. — Graham v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 69 Ark. 562; Carolina Cent. R. Co. v. McCaskill, 94 N. Car. 747.

In North Carolina it is provided by statute that railroad companies shall not lose their rights of way by adverse occupancy. Beattie v. Carolina Cent. R. Co., 108 N. Car. 425. And see Carolina Cent. R. Co. v. McCaskill, 94 N. Car. 747.

But the statute does not apply in a case where a railroad which has acquired its right of way by an unrecorded agreement abandons work on its road for a long time. Beattie v. Carolina Cent. R. Co., 108 N. Car. 425.

7. Forfeiture for Failure to Complete Road on Time. — McGregor, etc., R. Co. v. Sioux City, etc., R. Co., 49 Iowa 604.

The Forfeiture May Be Limited to that portion of the road which is not completed. State v. International, etc., R. Co., 57 Tex. 534.

Statutory Provisions. — In some of the states statutes have been enacted providing that land taken by a railroad shall revert to the original owner on failure of the company to use such land or to operate its road for a certain period of time.¹

Effect of Abandonment. — Where the road is abandoned or removed from the strip of land over which the railroad has a right of way the land is discharged of the burden,² and, as a general rule, reverts to its original owner.³ A temporary abandonment, however, does not entitle the landowner to a second payment of land damages when the company finally builds its road.⁴ On abandonment of its right of way a railroad company has the right to remove its rails,⁵ or stone piers built by it as a part of its road.⁶

11. Use of Highways and Streets — a. RURAL HIGHWAYS — In General. — The legislature may authorize a railroad company to occupy a public highway longitudinally,⁷ or power to authorize such use may be conferred by statute upon some court of competent jurisdiction.⁸ The power, however, must be given expressly or by necessary implication,⁹ and does not exist in the absence of legislative grant.¹⁰

Diversion of Highways. — Railroad companies are sometimes empowered by law

The United States Alone Can Enforce a Forfeiture of lands granted by act of Congress for failure to complete the road within the time limited by the act. C., etc., R. Co. v. Grinnell, 51 Iowa 476.

Implied Obligation to Build Within Reasonable Time. — An obligation to construct the road within a reasonable time may be implied from a deed which provides for reverter of the land granted to the grantor in case the company ceases to use it for railroad purposes, and in such a case the right of way may be forfeited for delay in building the road. Pollock v. Maysville, etc., R. Co., 103 Ky. 84.

to change the location of highways where such change is essential to the construction of their roads.¹

Manner of Use. — Power conferred upon a railroad company to use a public highway for its road is not power to destroy the public easement therein,² and the railroad must be so constructed as not to obstruct public travel unnecessarily.³ As a general rule, the right granted to the company is that of passing and repassing over the highway with its trains, and does not include the right to store cars therein, or to use the highway for its freight or passenger depots.⁴

Restoration to Former State of Usefulness. — Statutes authorizing the use of highways by railroads generally provide that such highways shall be restored to their former state or to such state as not to impair unnecessarily their usefulness,⁵ or that a substitute road shall be provided by the company where the original highway is destroyed.⁶ Whether or not the company is bound to keep the highway in repair, after its restoration, depends upon the terms of the particular statute imposing the obligation.⁷

Right of Abutting Owner to Compensation or Damages. — In some jurisdictions it is held that the appropriation of a highway by a steam railroad company is the imposition of an additional servitude for which abutting owners are entitled to compensation or damages, while in others a contrary doctrine prevails.⁸

b. UNDER CHARTERS AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS — In General. — In some jurisdictions, by charter or statutory provisions, permission is given railway companies to cross, unite with, or make use of the right of way of other companies for certain purposes and within defined limits, or the obligation is imposed on all railway companies of allowing other companies to make such use of their property.⁶ In the absence of such a statute the mere fact that a railroad company has constructed its track without authority does not justify its use by another company.⁷

Statute Unconstitutional. — Where no right to amend or repeal the charter of a railroad company has been reserved, a statute requiring all railroad companies to allow the use of their tracks by other companies for a specified distance, is unconstitutional as being an impairment of contract obligation, even though the state had, in the particular charter, reserved the right to allow any other roads in the state to connect with the road of the defendant. use of its right of way by other companies is reserved in the charter, such right is in the nature of a servitude, which is to be exercised only upon the payment of reasonable compensation. The consent of the servient company is not essential, however, and no obligation to continue to make use of the road is imposed upon the company exercising the right. Such right is more in the nature of a privilege granted than of a contract between the companies.¹ The company exercising the right must adhere to the conditions under which it is granted;² and where the statute is special the company cannot use the right of way of any company not named therein.³

Applies to Branch Roads. — Such a right reserved in the charter of a company extends also to a branch road purchased by it, though a similar reservation was not contained in the charter under which the latter was created.⁴

Manner of Exercise and Compensation. — The statute generally provides for the appointment of commissioners to determine the manner in which the companies are to use the right of way, and the compensation to be paid for such use.⁵

Judicial Control. — Where a statute gives to two roads community of interest in a right of way, the court will exercise judicial control over their conduct towards each other, in order to protect their respective rights, and where it is shown that one of the companies is being unlawfully interfered with in the enjoyment of the right, the courts will intervene.⁶

c. UNDER RESERVATION IN GRANT OF RIGHT OF WAY. — It is sometimes provided in the deed granting a right of way that certain companies shall have the right to run a parallel track upon the same right of way. This stipulation creates an equitable easement or right to the parallel track in favor of such other companies as come within the provision, and the grantee, upon the acceptance of the deed, becomes bound thereby.⁷ Where specific performance of the covenant is sought it must be shown that there is sufficient unoccupied space on the grantee's right of way for the location of another road, and that the road which it is sought to construct comes within the provisions of the grant.⁸

d. UNDER CONTRACT, LEASE, OR LICENSE — In General. — One company may acquire the right to use the right of way of another by contract, lease, or permission from the latter.⁹ This permission need not be by express grant, but may be by such acts or acquiescence as to give rise to a presumption of a grant, sufficient in equity to estop the denial thereof.¹⁰

pany is strictly construed, and where the licensee is authorized to use the way for a track of a certain gauge it has no power to operate a road of a broader gauge thereon.¹

Specific Performance of Agreement. — Where a contract for such use has been made, equity will compel a specific performance of the agreement.²

Rescission of Agreement. — The state has no concern in an agreement between two railroads whereby one leases to the other the right to construct over the route which it has located, as long as only one railroad is constructed on the route, and the agreement may be released, abandoned, or rescinded by the subsequent act or consent of the two railroads.³

Parol License Revocable at Will. — A parol agreement to allow one railway company to extend its track on the right of way of another for the purpose of connecting therewith is a mere license, revocable at the will of the licensor, and will not operate as an estoppel although the licensee has entered and made valuable improvements.⁴

Change of Location. — The location of the track of a railway company, built on the right of way of another company under a lease, may be changed by a verbal agreement between the parties.⁵

VII. CONSTRUCTION, EQUIPMENT, AND MAINTENANCE — 1. Construction. —

a. AUTHORITY AND DUTY TO CONSTRUCT. — The authority to construct railways is conferred by statute. The general power to construct a road includes the power to construct the necessary side tracks, switches, terminals, etc.⁶ The company, in accepting the franchise to construct its railway, must accept the same in toto, and such authority does not authorize the construction of a part of the road only.⁷ Before the company can properly enter upon the construction of the road it must comply with all conditions precedent in the grant of its authority.⁸

Duty to Construct. — Where a railroad company is chartered with power to take private property under the right of eminent domain and construct its road, this authority is in the first instance permissive only, and though the company may forfeit its franchise for failure to construct its road,⁹ still, it will not be compelled by mandamus to construct its road.¹⁰ absence of some provision in the charter of the railway company, it does not seem that there is any general requirement that the road should be completed within a particular time, though the failure of the company to take steps to construct its road may be ground for the forfeiture of its charter as for a nonuser.¹

c. GENERAL PLAN OF CONSTRUCTION — Gauge. — A railroad company which contains no restrictions in its charter as to the gauge of its tracks has the right to adopt any gauge in ordinary use,² and its adoption and use of a certain gauge does not preclude it from afterwards making a change therein.³ Of course, railway companies may be restricted by provisions in their charters as to the gauge to be adopted.⁴

Character of Rail. — In the absence of provisions in the charter, the company may adopt and use any character of rail in common use,⁵ and after it has adopted and used one character of rail it is not precluded from making a change therein.⁶

Location of Track on Right of Way. — A railway company is not required to locate its tracks in the centre of the right of way,⁷ and the places where the connection of switches, etc., with the main track should be is in the absolute discretion of the company,⁸ and a location of its tracks upon one part of its right of way does not deprive it of the right to relocate them.⁹

d. CONSTRUCTION CONTRACTS. — Contracts for the construction of railroads have naturally given rise to a great deal of litigation; the law relating to such contracts is in no sense peculiar as distinguished from the law relating to other working contracts, and the reader is referred to another place in this work for a general discussion of the principles relating to such contracts.¹⁰

Construction of Particular Contracts and Clauses. — The rules with regard to the construction of contracts in general apply, of course, to the kind of contracts now under consideration.¹¹ Particular words and phrases occurring in such contracts, and which are in their nature technical, have been construed by the courts; such as "filling in,"¹² "surfaced,"¹³ "grading,"¹⁴ "build and complete road,"¹⁵ to construct railroad for consideration "per mile,"¹⁶ "hailed by wagon,"¹⁷ "hard pan,"¹⁸ "loose rock,"¹⁹ "between termini."²⁰

Where the company is required to furnish the ground from which earth for an embankment is to be taken, ground within a reasonably convenient distance of the embankment must be furnished.¹

Arbitration of Disputes. — Stipulations requiring the submission to arbitration of disputes and differences between the parties are generally inserted in such contracts,² and neither party can arbitrarily in the first instance ignore such stipulation and resort to the courts for the settlement of such disputes.³

Estimation of Engineers as to Quantity of Work. — Stipulations for the estimation by engineers of the quantity and character of work done, which shall be final and conclusive, are valid and binding.⁴ The estimates may, of course, be impeached for fraud,⁵ and also, it seems, for gross mistake,⁶ or for a mistake arising out of the engineers' misconstruction of the contract.⁷ The fact that the engineer is also a stockholder in the railroad company does not render invalid a stipulation for admeasurement by him of the amount of work done.⁸ Where payments for work done are to be made periodically as the work progresses, upon estimates by the engineer of the amount of work, it has been held that a final and accurate estimate and measurement for each period should be made, and not a mere proximate conjectural estimate.⁹ The necessity for an estimate by the engineer is dispensed with where he refuses after reasonable demand to make one.¹⁰

Provision for Payment in Stock and Bonds of Company. — Frequently such contracts provide for payment in part or in whole in the bonds and stock of the company, and such agreements are unobjectionable.¹¹

Option to Terminate Contract. — Where the option is given the railway company to terminate the contract, the exercise of such option does not deprive the contractor of the right to compensation for work theretofore done.¹

Performance and Breach — By Contractor. — The contractor is, of course, liable in damages to the railway company for failure on his part to perform his agreements,² such as his failure to perform the work in the required time.³ And where the contractor fails to complete his contract the company may retain, from the compensation agreed to be paid, a sum reasonably sufficient to finish the work.⁴ So, also, where the contractor has broken his agreement, the company may terminate the contract and take the work out of his hands.⁵

Dependent and Independent Agreements. — While the contractor must perform all dependent agreements on his part to entitle him to recover upon the contract for work done, his failure to perform independent agreements does not have the effect of defeating a recovery upon the contract.⁶

Performance to Satisfaction of Engineers or Inspectors. — A stipulation that the work shall be done to the satisfaction of the engineers of the railway company is an appropriate engagement, which will be enforced and carried into effect by the courts.⁷ And similarly a stipulation for the inspection of materials to be furnished, by the inspector of the company, is valid.⁸

Certificate of Engineers as to Performance. — Railway construction contracts frequently require, as a condition precedent to a recovery for work done, that there should be a certificate from the engineer that the work has been performed.⁹

Subcontracting. — In the absence of restrictions in the contract, there does not seem to be any rule prohibiting the contractor from subletting his

Notice to Subcontractor. — Where the contractor sublet a section of the road under a stipulation that if the work should not be prosecuted with sufficient energy the chief engineer might, upon written notice to the subcontractor, declare the contract forfeited or carry it forward at the expense and for the benefit of the subcontractor, it was held that the engineer could not be compelled to give the notice, and that a written notice by the contractor to the subcontractor was sufficient, it appearing that the engineer had previously orally notified both that the work was not progressing satisfactorily. *Hendrie v. contract;¹ but in such cases the remedy of the subcontractor, in the absence of statutory provision, is against the contractor, and not against the railway company.²

Extra Work. — A railway contractor cannot claim extra compensation for work not included in his contract, and which was done without any agreement between himself and the railway company;³ but he may, of course, recover for extra work done at the request of the company.⁴ The engineers of the company whose duty it is merely to see that the contract is properly executed cannot bind the company to pay therefor.⁵

e. INJURIES FROM CONSTRUCTION OF ROAD — General Rule. — A railway company, after acquisition of its right of way, either by condemnation proceedings or voluntary conveyances, is not liable for injuries to adjoining land-owners incidental to the construction of its road, where due diligence has been used in the planning and construction of the road; the presumption being that such injuries were either allowed for in the condemnation proceedings or were taken into consideration by the parties, where the conveyance of the right of way to the company was voluntary, and as to other persons such consequential injuries are damnum absque injuria.⁶

Where the construction contract provides that no deviation from the terms of the contract shall be permitted unless with the written sanction of the engineer, and that no claim for extra work will be allowed under any pretense unless on a written order for the same by the engineer, a party doing the work cannot recover without showing such written order, even though there is another clause in the contract providing that the engineer may direct alterations, additions, etc. White v. Convenience of Landowners. — The company is not bound to construct the road with reference to the greatest convenience to the adjoining landowners, but is authorized to build in accordance with its general plan with reference to cost and its own advantage in making a safe and good road.¹

Unnecessary Injuries. — But the company is not allowed to adopt a plan for construction which will unnecessarily injure the adjoining landowners.²

Trespass. — The company, in constructing its road, has no authority, of course, to commit trespasses upon adjoining lands outside of its right of way.³ Thus, the company is liable in case it deposits waste earth upon lands of third persons outside of its right of way.⁴

Reasonable Diligence. — The company is bound to use reasonable diligence in the construction of the railway so as to avoid injury to third persons.⁵

Engineering Skill. — It must use, in planning the work, the engineering knowledge and skill ordinarily practiced in such work.⁶

Embankments, Cuts, Culverts, Bridges, etc. — The company must construct its embankments of such material as will prevent the washing of matter upon adjoining lands;⁷ in case of cuts, when it is found necessary to protect adjoining lands, retaining walls must be built;⁸ in crossing watercourses, proper bridges and culverts must be constructed, so as to allow of the free passage of water;⁹ and in case of embankments over natural drains for surface

Elevation of Roadbed. — Where the right of way was acquired by a railroad company for the purpose of constructing, maintaining and operating its road, the amount of damages to which the owner was entitled settled, and the road built upon substantially the surface level of the ground, the owner will not be entitled to additional damages on account of the subsequent elevation of its roadbed by the company. *Chicago, etc., R. f. CONSTRUCTION LIENS — (1) In General. — At common law no lien, in the absence of express contract, existed against railways for claims arising out of their construction.⁴ And on grounds of public policy it has been held that the statutes providing generally for liens in favor of persons performing labor or furnishing materials in the construction of buildings, structures, etc., would not be construed so as to subject railways to liens for claims arising out of their construction.⁵

Statutes. — In many jurisdictions the statutes expressly provide for liens upon railroads for claims arising out of their construction.¹ Statutes giving liens for claims arising out of the construction of railways are not retroactive so as to apply to claims theretofore accrued.² Under these statutes, liens are generally given to contractors,³ subcontractors,⁴ laborers or persons performing work or labor⁵ either for a contractor⁶ or for a subcontractor,⁷ or

Railroad Owned by Individuals. — In Arkansas it has been held that the statute creating a lien in favor of one who furnished material to build "any railroad" upon the roadbed, equipments, and appurtenances of the road, was broad enough to embrace every railroad, whether owned by an incorporated company or not, and that the lien might therefore exist where the railroad was constructed by individuals who owned the road as a copartnership or in common, without incorporation. *Brown v. for materials furnished.¹ The statute giving a lien upon the railroad in favor of subcontractors does not impose, of itself, any personal liability upon the railway company for the claims of such persons,² and the extent of the lien in favor of such persons is generally limited to the amount of the indebtedness on the part of the railway company to the original contractor.³

"Construction." — The statutes giving a lien upon the railway for materials or labor furnished for its construction should be limited to materials and labor which go into the construction of the railroad, so as to be, in a sense, incorporated therein,⁴ and does not entitle a person to a lien for board, groceries, money, etc., furnished to laborers of a contractor or subcontractor,⁵ or for labor or materials used for the erection of temporary sheds or houses for the horses or laborers of the contractor,⁶ though the statutes have been held to include blasting powder furnished for and used in preparing the right of way.⁷

(2) Property Subject to Lien. — Where the lien is given upon the railroad, it should be claimed and enforced against the entire road, and not merely against a section of the road.⁸ The rolling stock of a railroad is not to be

(4) Assignment of Lien. — After a lien for a claim arising out of the construction of a railroad has been perfected, there does not seem to be any reason for prohibiting its assignment and the enforcement of the lien by the assignee;² but before the lien has been perfected the claim cannot be assigned so as to enable the assignee to perfect the lien.³

(5) Priorities. — The question with regard to the priority of construction liens over railway mortgages has been already discussed.⁴ A purchaser of the railroad takes subject to all liens.⁵

g. LIABILITY OF RAILROAD COMPANY FOR CONSTRUCTION CLAIMS. —

At Common Law, a railway company was under no liability for the wages of laborers employed by a contractor or subcontractor in the construction of the railway,⁶ nor for materials furnished to such persons.⁷

Statutes. — In some jurisdictions statutes have been enacted which impose upon the company a personal liability for the wages of laborers employed by contractors in the construction of the railway. Thus, in Kansas and Maine a company in contracting for the construction of its road must take a bond or security from the contractor to pay particular indebtedness incurred in the work under penalty, on failure to do so, of being personally liable therefor.⁸ In other jurisdictions the liability of the railway company for such indebtedness is more absolute,⁹ while under other statutes the liability of the company is limited in amount to its indebtedness to its contractor for whom the labor was performed.¹⁰

How Construed. — Though these statutes are to be construed so as to advance the remedy intended by the legislature, they should not be extended beyond the fair import of their terms for the purpose of imposing additional liability upon the railway company.¹¹

Lumber Company Not Railroad Company. — A lumber company organized under Rev. Stat.

Constitutionality. — Such statutes are not unconstitutional as an alteration of the charter of the companies theretofore incorporated,¹ nor as binding the companies by contracts to which they were not parties.²

Territorial Operation. — Statutes of this class have no extraterritorial force, and are inapplicable to a foreign railway company contracting in another state for the construction of the part of its road lying therein.³

Who Entitled to Benefit of Statutes. — Only the persons who come within the terms of the statute are entitled to the benefits of it.⁴ Where the liability of the company is generally to laborers, mechanics, etc., employed upon the work, this includes laborers and mechanics employed by subcontractors as well as by contractors.⁵

Assignees of Claims of Laborers, Etc. — Assignees of the claims of laborers employed by a contractor may enforce such statutory liability of the railway company to such laborers, which had become complete at the time of the assignment.⁶

"Construction" of Road. — The phrase "construction of its road or any part thereof," as used in a statute imposing personal liability on the company for particular indebtedness incurred by its contractors, is not restricted merely to the first and original construction, but has been held to include additions and extensions to the road as originally built, such as the building of side-tracks,⁷ or the replacing of an old bridge by a new one.⁸

Perfection of Claim Against Railway Company. — Those seeking to avail themselves of the benefit of the statute must comply with all the requirements of the statutes imposing such liability upon the company. Thus, the requirement as to notice to the company of the claim of the laborer or materialman must be complied with.⁹

Me., c. 48, § 16, as a manufacturing corporation, having constructed a railroad on its own land to facilitate its own lumbering operations, is not a railroad company within the meaning of the statute (c. 51, § 141) making a railway company liable to pay the laborers employed by contractors in the construction of their road in case they fail to take the required security. Palangio v. Wild River Lumber Co., 86 Me. 315.

Such Statutes Are Not to Be Given a Retroactive Effect so as to impose liability upon a railway company which, prior to its enactment, contracted for the construction of its road, though the work of construction was afterwards performed. Parker v. Massachusetts R. Co., 115 Mass. 580. See also Brinin v. Connecticut, etc., R. Co., 31 Vt. 214. Compare Grannahan v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 30 Mo. 546.

9. Notice of Claim. — Lyon v. New York, etc., Volume XXIII.

Evidence. — Time checks given by a contractor to his laborers are not admissible as evidence against the railway company in an action to enforce the statutory liability of a railway company for labor performed for a contractor.¹

h. LIABILITY OF STOCKHOLDERS FOR CONSTRUCTION CLAIMS. — Some statutes have imposed upon the stockholders of a railway company liability for the claims of persons performing labor or furnishing materials for the road.²

2. Equipment and Maintenance — a. GENERAL STATEMENT. — The duty of railroad companies in the equipment and operation of their roads, as regards their employees,³ or passengers,⁴ or persons at crossings,⁵ or animals upon their tracks,⁶ or fires communicated,⁷ has been treated under appropriate titles in this work, and the liability for injuries to persons at or near their tracks is discussed in another place in this title.⁸

b. MOTIVE POWER. — Where authority is by the charter given to a railway company to use either steam or horse power upon its road, this confers a continuing option which may be exercised from time to time, and under it, the use of either motive power may be changed and the other substituted as the company may see fit.⁹ Public policy prohibits a railway company from contracting with private individuals not to use a particular motive power, as such an agreement might prevent it from performing its duties to the public as occasion might require.¹⁰

c. NATURE OF EQUIPMENT AS PROPERTY — WHETHER REAL OR PERSONAL. — There is a conflict of authority upon the question whether the rolling stock of a railroad corporation is to be regarded as personal property or real property. By the weight of authority, such property, in the absence of constitutional or statutory provision, is recognized as personal property.¹¹

In Mundt v. Sheboygan, etc., R. Co., 31 Wis. 451, a notice to the company that the plaintiff had a claim against it to a specified amount of labor in the construction of the road between specified dates was held to be sufficient, although it did not name the contractor by whom he was employed.

Time of Giving Notice. — Where notice of the claim of laborers is required to be given within a certain time after the completion of the labor, the fact that laborers are paid monthly does not require notice to be given within the required time after each pay day, but a notice given within the specified time after the entire employment is ended is sufficient. In a few cases, however, rolling stock has been held to be real estate, on account of its constructive annexation to the roadbed.¹ In some jurisdictions, by statutory or constitutional provision, the nature of the property, whether real or personal, is provided for.² Office furniture, fuel, and similar detached properties are unquestionably personal property.³ On the other hand, the roadbed, including rails, sleepers, ties, etc., attached to the soil on which the roadbed is built, is real estate.⁴

d. ATTACHMENTS AND EXECUTIONS AGAINST EQUIPMENT. — The general rule, based on the ground of public policy, that the property of quasi-public corporations essential to the discharge of their public duties is exempt from seizure and sale on attachments and executions⁵ has been applied so as to exempt from seizure and sale on such writs the roadbed, including bridges and structures, of a railway company.⁶ The rolling stock of a railway company not in actual use is not, it seems, by the better doctrine,

In Hoyle v. Plattsburgh, etc., R. Co., 54 N. Y. 314, 13 Am. Rep. 595, it was said that the "want of the element of localization in use is a controlling and conclusive reason why the character of realty should not be given to rolling stock of a railroad."

Where a Company Owns Both the Roadbed and the Iron Attached to it, the iron is a part of the realty. Likewise, where a trespasser not owning the roadbed attaches his own iron thereto, the iron immediately becomes a part of the realty and belongs to the owner of the roadbed. But this rule does not apply where a railroad attaches iron belonging to a construction company to a roadbed owned by a third person, without the consent of the construction company. In such a case the iron does not become a part of the realty. Shoemaker v. Simpson, 16 Kan. 49; Palmer v. Forbes, 23 Ill. 301.

VIII. OPERATION OF ROAD — 1. Railroads as Highways — Power to Operate. — Originally railroads seem to have been constructed as public highways, open to the use of the public with their own vehicles subject to the payment of toll. In modern times they are, as a general thing, operated by the persons owning them or by those with whom the owners make permanent arrangements, and, for the most part, by corporations; a result due to the great expense involved in the construction and operation of such improvements as they have actually developed. In practice a franchise to equip and operate the road, as well as to construct it, is invariably given and is probably necessary to confer the power.²

2. Rights and Liabilities — a. IN GENERAL. — Upon general principles, applicable to all corporations, the legislature may impose upon a corporation operating a railroad, as the law of its creation, the obligation to exercise the powers which are granted, to their fullest extent; and by virtue of the police power, a reserved power to alter charters, or the public character of the improvement, many acts which involve expense may be required of the corporation in the operation of its road, or new liabilities imposed upon it, which it might not undertake or assume if left to itself. A corporation operating a railroad may also owe certain duties to the public which arise by implication of law and are subject to reasonable regulation by the state. Aside from its duties as a common carrier, however, no well-defined rule has been laid down by the decisions for guidance in determining what implied duties are assumed by the acceptance of the charter.³

b. MAINTENANCE AND OPERATION OF ROAD. — Thus, a railroad corporation may be obligated by statute to operate all or any portion of its road; to erect stations; stop its trains at stations; run trains of a designated number or character; make switch-track connections, and perform other and similar duties which the state may deem necessary for the public convenience and welfare and make mandatory.⁴ Where there are no special circumstances

Fires. — For the statutory liability of railroad companies for property destroyed by fire communicated in the course of the operation of the railroad, see the title FIRES, vol. 13, pp. 419 et seq., 499 et seq.

Corporation as Public Agency. — A corporation in constructing and making such a highway as a railroad, under public sanction, really performs a function of the state. Therefore it accepts its charter subject necessarily to the condition that it will conform, in operating the road, to such reasonable regulations as the state will from time to time establish that are not in violation of the supreme law of the land. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Ohio, 173 U. S. 285.

While the Law Affords Railroad Corporations Adequate and Complete Protection in the exercise of their chartered rights, it also holds them to a strict performance of the public duties enjoined upon them as a consideration for the rights and powers thus granted. In cases of apparent conflict between the rights and powers conferred and the duties imposed, the solution may oftentimes be rendered easy by regarding the admitted right of public use as the touchstone of judicial interpretation. Railroad Com'rs v. Portland, etc., R. Co., 63 Me. 269, 18 Am. Rep. 208, quoted in Scofield v. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co., 43 Ohio St. 571, 54 Am. Rep. 846.

Co.*, 120 Ill. 48; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Suffern, 129 Ill. 274, affirming 27 Ill. App. 404; Ohio, etc., R. Co. v. People, 29 Ill. App. 561.

or direct statutory requirements, however, the decisions are at variance on the question of an implied duty to continue the operation of the road, or to equip and operate it in such manner as will best accommodate the general public; but by the weight of authority the determination of such matters is within the discretionary power of the corporation, and its action is subject only to legislative control, or, in a proper case, to a forfeiture of the franchise.¹ The application of these principles to specific instances will be found discussed in other titles in this work.²

c. AS COMMON CARRIERS. — Corporations and other persons operating railroads for the general carriage of goods for hire are subject to the provisions of the common law applicable to other common carriers, and to reasonable statutory regulation as to the manner of the discharge of the duties thus implied from the public character of the business.³

Road Operated at a Loss. — "If a railroad can be operated profitably, the interest of those concerned will rarely, if ever, fail to keep it in operation, so as to subserve the public use. If it cannot, we know of no mode by which the state can compel those by whom it was constructed to operate it at a loss; and certainly there is no mode provided by which it can be operated at the expense and risk of the state." Coe v. Columbus, etc., R. Co., 10 Ohio St. 372, 75 Am. Dec. 518.

If the loss is the result of improvident and unthrifty management, the court may, at the suit of those interested, take charge of it for the benefit of all concerned and run it through the instrumentality of a receiver, but if the traffic of the road is really insufficient to support a wise and economical administration of its affairs there would seem to be no escape from its ultimate abandonment. Sherwood v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 94 Va. 291.

Dismantling Road. — It has been held that a railroad when constructed becomes a public instrumentality, and the roadbed, superstructure, and other permanent property of the corporation become devoted to the public use; so that, although the corporation cannot be compelled to operate it, the road cannot be dismantled and destroyed and the property disposed of without the sanction of the state. *State v. The Common Law imposes some duties upon companies chartered as common carriers, irrespective of any mention of such duties in their charters. All carriers who undertake to transport goods or passengers for the public assume certain duties to the public. San Antonio St. R. Co. v. State, 90 Tex. 520, 59 Am. St. Rep. 834.

Power to Make Rules and Contracts. — A railroad company can make such rules and contracts, and establish such customs, as it pleases, relative to the operation of its road

d. NEGLIGENCE IN OPERATING — POLICE POWER. — Apart from their rights and liabilities as common carriers,¹ railroad corporations are bound to conduct their business with a care and skill commensurate with its dangerous character, without any special legislation on the subject, and their liability for injuries to person or property in the absence of such legislation is governed by the general law of negligence. It is a universal principle not applicable alone to such companies that the care to be exercised in the conduct of any business must be proportionate to its dangerous character.² Railroad corporations, like individuals, are also amenable to the police power of the state, and laws conducing to the safety and welfare of the public, which prescribe extraordinary vigilance, skill, exertion, and other precautions in the operation of railroads are numerous, and, although entailing expense upon the owners of the roads, are a valid exercise of the power.³ A full treatment of the rights and liabilities of railroad corporations in this connection will be found elsewhere in this work.⁴

e. CONTRACTUAL OBLIGATIONS. — Obligations relating to the operation and the conduct of its business, if they are not inconsistent with its duties as a common carrier; but it can go no further, and any general language which its charter may contain must necessarily be construed with that limitation. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. People, 56 Ill. 365, 8 Am. Rep. 690. See the title CARRIERS OF PASSENGERS, vol. 5, p. 482.

of the road, the erection of stations and the like, arising out of contract, may be invalid on grounds of public policy in so far as to be incapable of specific performance; but only where they tend to prevent the corporation from discharging its duties to the public efficiently.¹

3. Corporations and Persons Liable for Injuries — a. IN GENERAL. — It is often a matter of considerable difficulty to place the responsibility for injuries arising from the operation of railroads, owing to the use of rolling stock and tracks in common by several companies, traffic arrangements between connecting lines, operation of switch tracks for the convenience of individual shippers, and like relations growing out of the modern development of such highways; the operation of roads by courts through the instrumentality of receivers and trustees; the character of the injury, and various other considerations. Elsewhere in this work the responsibility is discussed from different points of view.²

b. CORPORATIONS MAKING COMMON USE OF TRACKS AND SERVICES OF EMPLOYEES. — As a general rule a corporation engaged in operating a road for its own purposes at the time will be liable for an injury due to its negligence or that of the servants conducting the business, whatever relations it may have with reference to the use of tracks and the services of employees in common with other such corporations.³ For an injury caused by a corporation while operating its trains over tracks not owned by it the owner of the tracks is also liable, unless exempt by force of legislative enactment, whether the arrangement between them is a mere license, a lease, or a sale.¹

c. USE BY ONE CORPORATION OF ROLLING STOCK OWNED BY ANOTHER. — A railroad corporation using rolling stock belonging to another company for its own purposes, and not the owner or corporation from which it received it, is generally liable for injuries caused by its defects.²

d. LIABILITY OF CORPORATIONS AS CARRIERS — AS MASTERS. — A railroad corporation is generally liable for injuries to its own passengers or shippers due to the negligence of corporations with which it makes common use of tracks, services of employees, and the like, as well as for injuries attributable directly to its own negligent acts or omissions. This results from the absolute character of the duty with which common carriers and carriers of passengers are charged by law.³ Its relation to its own employees, on the other hand, and its liabilities for injuries to them, are governed by the relative duties imposed by law upon master and servant. Employees, like other persons, may recover of those who are guilty of the negligence; but the master is liable only for injuries which result from its failure to discharge those duties to its servants which are absolute in law.⁴

e. OPERATION OF SWITCH TRACKS. — A railroad corporation is generally liable for injuries due to negligence in operating switch tracks, irrespective of whether they are used for general purposes or merely for the convenience of individual shippers.¹

f. NEGLIGENCE OF POSTAL CLERKS AND NEWS AGENTS. — A railroad corporation is liable for injuries due to negligent or dangerous practices followed by persons, such as postal clerks and news agents, employed upon its trains but in the service of others rightfully using them, where it is cognizant or must be presumed to have knowledge of such practices.²

g. JOINT AND SEVERAL LIABILITY — CONCURRENT NEGLIGENCE. — Where two or more railroad companies are engaged in joint operations and the negligent conduct of the business results in injury to persons or property, or the injury is caused by the concurrent negligence of two or more corporations, they are jointly and severally liable for the damage.³

4. Injuries to Persons On or Near Tracks — a. LIABILITY IN GENERAL. — The liability of a railroad company for injuries sustained by a person on or near its tracks, from some act or omission alleged to constitute negligence, depends upon the legal duty of the railroad company in respect to the person injured. If there is no duty there is no negligence. Even if the company owes a duty to some one else, the failure to perform it does not create a liability to a person injured by such nonperformance if the duty was not one which the company owed to him.⁴ The measure of diligence, therefore, due by a railroad company to any person is a relative one, and what is or is not due diligence must be arrived at in every case with reference to the surrounding circumstances, and the relation which for the time being the company and the person occupied in respect to each other.⁵

b. OBLIGATION OF RAILROAD IN RESPECT TO ROADBED, YARDS, AND TRACKS — (1) In General. — A railroad company is under no legal obligation to keep its roadbed, yards, and tracks free from pitfalls or obstructions for the safety of trespassers⁶ or persons who go there merely for their own convenience or pleasure.⁷ If a person goes upon the premises of a railroad company without any inducement or invitation being held out to him by the company or its agents, he accepts the use of the premises subject to all dangers incident thereto, and cannot recover for injuries caused by obstructions or pitfalls thereon.¹ But in respect to persons who come upon the premises of a railroad company by its invitation, expressed² or implied,³ the company is bound to keep places where such persons may ordinarily be expected to go, in reasonably safe condition, and is liable for negligence if it fails to do so.

7. To Bare Licensees — United States. — Morgan v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 19 Blatchf. (U. S.) 239 (falling into unprotected pit); Cleveland,

(2) Duty to Block Frogs and Guard Rails. — A statute requiring railroad companies to block the frogs and switches in their tracks is intended for the protection of employees, and an omission of this duty is not such negligence in respect to a trespasser as to render a railroad company liable for his death from being run over by a train while his foot was held by an unblocked frog.⁴ But, independently of statute, ordinary care requires that where railroad tracks are laid along a public street guard rails should be properly blocked for the protection of persons walking along or crossing the tracks, and a failure to do so renders the company liable for an injury attributable to its negligence.⁵

(3) Duty to Fence In Tracks. — In the Absence of Statutory Requirement, a railroad company is under no legal obligation to fence in its tracks, and hence the omission to do so does not constitute such negligence as to render the company liable for the death or injury of a child who may wander upon them.⁶

Under Statutes Requiring Erection of Fences. — Whether or not negligence is predicable upon the omission under statutes requiring railroad companies to erect and maintain fences along their right of way depends largely upon the construction of the particular statute. If the statute is merely intended for the

3. Implied Invitation. — If a railroad company permits its right of way to be used by the public for purposes of travel, it becomes liable to one injured by an obstruction or dangerous contrivance while availing himself of the implied invitation. Hansen v. Southern Pac.

Co., 105 Cal. 379; Burton v. Western, etc., R. Co., 98 Ga. 783.

It may be otherwise, however, where a town has converted this part of the right of way into a public street, and has repaired it as such. Neal v. Southern R. Co., 128 N. Car. 143.

A Railroad Company, in Constructing Its Bridge over a River and making lateral embankments adjoining a highway, is bound to so construct such embankments as not to render the approach to the bridge along the highway dangerous for passengers by day or night; and a failure to perform this duty subjects it to liability for the consequences, provided the party thereby injured has used reasonable and ordinary care to avoid the danger. Hence it is proper to exclude evidence that protection of the cattle of the owners or occupants of adjoining lands,¹ or of passengers whose safety would be jeopardized by the presence of such cattle on the track,² or if the obligation to fence is not made absolute by the statute, but the failure merely makes the company liable for all damages arising from the injury or killing of cattle on its unfenced tracks,³ the omission to erect and maintain such fences is not negligence in respect to children or other trespassers, or bare licensees who may be killed or injured on the track, for the reason that the obligation imposed by the statute is not created for their security.⁴ If, on the other hand, the duty to erect and maintain fences is made absolute,⁵ or if the omission subjects the company to liability "for all damages sustained by any person in consequence of such failure or neglect,"⁶ or if the statute, though primarily designed for the protection of cattle, can, by any legitimate construction, be given a larger scope,⁷ the courts have not been loath to extend its protection to children incapable of exercising intelligence sufficient to avoid going upon the tracks, and to sustain judgments in their favor whenever noncompliance can properly be regarded as the proximate cause of their injuries.⁸ The courts have not, however, extended such statutes for the protection of adult persons voluntarily upon the tracks for their own convenience.⁹

c. OBLIGATION IN RESPECT TO DANGEROUS INSTRUMENTALITIES. — A railroad company is not liable to a trespasser who finds a signal torpedo upon the track and is injured by its explosion while examining it.¹⁰ But it has been held to be negligence for the servant of a railroad company to place a signal torpedo upon the track, exposed to observation, at a point where the public, including children, are and have been permitted by the company to travel and pass; and if a child is attracted by and is killed by handling such torpedo the company is liable.¹¹

d. OBLIGATION IN RESPECT TO MOVEMENT OF TRAINS — (1) Obligation to Trespassers. — The only duty which a railroad company owes to a trespasser upon its tracks is to abstain from wantonly and wilfully injuring him, and no liability to such person arises from the want of ordinary care.¹ A railroad track is itself a warning of danger,² and trespassers thereon are charged with knowledge of the peril, and if they go there voluntarily are to be regarded as assuming the risk of the situation. Their own negligence precludes a recovery for any injury which they may receive from moving trains, unless the negligence of the railroad company was so gross as to show wantonness.³

Infant Trespassers. — The fact that a person is an infant does not affect his relation as a trespasser,¹ but it is material upon the question of his negligence in being upon the track,² and imposes upon the company a higher degree of care to avoid injuring him.³

(2) Obligation to Bare Licensees. — The rule in respect to trespassers applies also to mere licensees. The fact that a railroad company passively submits to the trespass does not impose upon it any greater obligation. The licensee accepts the use of the premises subject to its risks and cannot recover for an injury not wantonly or wilfully inflicted upon him.⁴

(3) Obligation to Persons on Premises by Invitation. — But to persons who come upon the property of a railroad company by its express or implied invitation or consent the company owes the duty to exercise reasonable care, and will be held liable for its ordinary negligence.⁵

(4) Obligation to Persons on Public Streets. — Where the tracks of a railroad company are laid through a public street, persons crossing or walking along such tracks are not trespassers,⁶ although such tracks may be elevated upon an embankment,¹ or the railroad company has posted notices forbidding the use of the tracks for foot passengers,² unless the municipal grant under which the tracks were laid gives to the company the exclusive right of the use of the street.³ Yet in respect to such tracks the rights of the public are subordinate to those of the railroad company;⁴ and while it is the duty of its servants to exercise ordinary care in the management of trains,⁵ it is also incumbent upon persons going upon the tracks to exercise ordinary care for their own safety.⁶

(5) Who Are Trespassers, Licensees, or Persons Present by Invitation — (a) Employees of Railroad Company. — It has been held that an employee of a railroad company who uses its tracks as a footpath while going to and returning from his work is a bare licensee,⁷ but there are decisions which seem to regard him as being there of right, and which hold the company in respect to him to the exercise of ordinary care.⁸

Person Learning Duties of Employment. — A person who enters a railroad yard under proper authority to learn the duties of a certain employment, with the understanding that he will be employed on becoming competent, is not a bare licensee, but is there by invitation.⁹ But one that comes there merely at the request of an employee to assist him in the work is a trespasser, unless the employee had authority to employ an assistant.¹⁰

(b) Employees of Associated Corporations or Independent Contractors — Employees of Associated Corporations. — Where two railroad companies by agreement use the same station, the employees of each are upon the common property of right and are entitled to demand the exercise of ordinary care from the employees of the other company.¹¹ And the same principle applies where the tracks of two companies lie adjacent and parallel, and the employees of each company are licensed in making signals to go upon the tracks of the other.¹²

Employees of Parlor Car Company. — The employee of a parlor car company who is obliged in the performance of his duties to cross the tracks of the railroad

It Is Contributory Negligence for a person to voluntarily walk along a track in a public thoroughfare used as a switchyard if the walking on either side is good. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Yniestra, 21 Fla. 700.

But it is not necessarily negligence to walk between tracks eight feet apart in a yard in a public street, although there is a sidewalk on either side of the street. East St. Louis Connecting R. Co. v. Reames, 173 Ill. 582.

An employee of a railroad company engaged company operating the cars is upon such premises by implied invitation.¹

Mail Clerks. — And the same is true of mail clerks engaged in transferring mail bags at a station.²

Employees of Independent Contractor. — Employees of an independent contractor employed by a railroad company upon its right of way,³ or to repair bridges and trestles⁴ or a station building,⁵ come upon the railroad premises by express invitation, and the company owes to them the duty of exercising ordinary care.

(c) Persons Guarding Premises. — A militiaman who is posted during a strike as a sentinel in a railroad company's freight yard for its protection is there by express invitation, and the company owes to him the duty of exercising ordinary care.⁶ But though a policeman may be authorized to patrol railroad tracks in a city, he may become a trespasser by walking thereon for his own convenience, on his way to enter on the discharge of his duties on his beat elsewhere.⁷

(d) Persons Transacting Business at Stations — aa. IN GENERAL. — Where a railroad company so locates its passenger station as to require persons coming from it to cross the tracks to reach the main business portion of a town,⁸ or to pass along the tracks to reach a highway,⁹ or vice versa, this is tantamount to an invitation to such persons to cross or pass along the tracks, and imposes upon the company the exercise of ordinary care, not only in respect to those who have been or intend to be passengers upon its trains, but also to those who come to meet passengers expected to pass through on a train.¹⁰ So, persons who enter a railroad freight yard in the necessary prosecution of business connected with the railroad company come there by implied invitation and are entitled to demand the exercise of ordinary care.¹¹ in delivering a car on to the track of another railroad company is there of right. Turner v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 158 Mass. 261.

5. Where a Contractor Engaged in Repairing a Railroad Station Building keeps his tools and materials in a car on one of the tracks with the knowledge and assent of the railroad company, an employee of the contractor crossing the tracks in going to and fro between the car and the station building does so by implied invitation of the railroad company. *Dempsey v. But where a railroad company provides offices for the transaction of its business, accessible from the street, a person who goes into the freight yard unnecessarily is at best a mere licensee. Diebold v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 50 N. J. L. 478.

Whether a person becomes a trespasser by deviating from a path across a freight yard, is a question of fact for the jury. Scott v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 112 Iowa 54.

delivering goods at a freight station,¹ or at a point selected by agreement between such person and the railroad company,² has a right in doing so to occupy a position designated by the agent of the company, even if such a position be hazardous, and has a right to rely upon the diligence of the company to protect him from harm.³ Mere convenience, not amounting to necessity, will not protect him, however, if he, of his own volition, selects a hazardous place at which to transact his business, and the company will not be liable for any injury not wilfully or wantonly inflicted upon him.⁴

cc. PERSONS LOADING OR UNLOADING CARS. — A person rightfully engaged in loading or unloading goods from a freight car is upon the railroad company's premises by its implied invitation, and the company owes to him the duty of exercising ordinary care.⁵ The fact that no agent of the company pointed out the car⁶ or knew that it was being loaded or unloaded at the time⁷ is immaterial if the car had been placed upon the side track for that purpose and the person injured was at the time rightfully engaged in the work.

(e) Persons Crossing Tracks. — Persons who for their own convenience cross the tracks of a railroad company at places other than crossings are trespassers.⁸ And the mere fact that people have frequently trespassed upon the track at this point, and that the company has not resorted to any means to stop the same, will not imply its consent to such use of the track, nor create any right in the public by such user.⁹ But where the public have for a long time notoriously and constantly been in the habit of crossing a railroad track at a point not in a traveled public highway, with the acquiescence of the railroad company, such acquiescence amounts to a license and imposes upon the company the duty to exercise reasonable care to protect such persons from injury.¹ For stronger reasons, if a railroad company erects and maintains a private way across its tracks in such a manner as to offer an inducement and invitation to persons to use the same, it is bound to exercise ordinary care to protect such persons from harm.²

(f) Persons Walking on Right of Way. — As a general rule, persons who walk along the right of way of a railroad company for their own convenience are to be regarded as trespassers, and the only duty which their presence imposed upon the company is to abstain from wilfully and wantonly injuring them.³ Yet if the company has for a long time permitted the public to travel and must be a path so well defined as to be an invitation to the public to use it, and this use must be so continuous as to apprise the company of the fact.¹ Any inference of acquiescence which may be drawn from the continuous use of a path is, of course, strengthened by proof of the erection of steps, gates, or turnstiles by the company to facilitate the use of its property by the public.²

(g) Persons Crossing Bridges and Trestles.—A person injured or killed while attempting to cross a railroad bridge or trestle is a trespasser, and the company owes to him no duty to anticipate his presence.³ Where, however, the public have been accustomed for a considerable length of time to use a railroad bridge as a footbridge without objection from the company, a license will be implied, and an obligation to exercise ordinary care is imposed.⁴

Duty to Person Thrown from Trestle.—Although a railroad company may not be liable in the first instance for an injury to a trespasser whom its train knocks from a trestle, yet, if those in charge of the train, knowing that the accident has happened, fail to stop the train and render whatever assistance is necessary to the wounded trespasser, the company becomes liable if the person dies of exposure. Mail Bags and Bundles.—If a railroad company knowingly permits mail bags and bundles to be thrown from its trains by mail clerks and news agents, it is liable for injuries from such causes to persons rightfully beside the track. Ohio, etc., R. Co. v. Simms, 43 Ill. App. 260; Bradford v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 160 Mass. 392; Shaw v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 123 Mich. 629; McGrath v. Eastern R. Co., 74 Minn. 363.

7. Persons Standing in Street.—Fletcher v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 168 U. S. 135; Jeffersonville, etc., R. Co. v. Riley, 39 Ind. 568 (wood thrown from train).

Sparks and Cinders.—A railroad company is liable for its negligence to a person, upon

(b) Injuries from Things Projecting from Cars. — On like principle, a railroad company is not liable to a trespasser or bare licensee who, while standing beside the track, is injured by an object projecting from a passing car.¹ But if the person injured is standing at a place where the public are used to cross the track with the knowledge and implied consent of the railroad company, its negligence has been held to be a question of fact for the jury;² and for stronger reasons, if the servants of the company operating the trains have knowledge of the projecting object, and, seeing the plaintiff's danger, neglect to warn him of it, the company is liable.³

(c) Injuries from Deraiment of Cars. — It has been held that a railroad company is not liable for the death of a trespasser or bare licensee who was killed, while walking beside the track at a place where pedestrians seldom went, by the deraiment of a car which was being hauled over a defective track at too great speed, for the reason that in respect to such person there was no duty, and consequently no negligence.⁴ But for the death or injury from this cause of a track repairer who was standing beside the track,⁵ or of a person lawfully present in a building against which the car was thrown,⁶ or who injured himself in endeavoring to escape from a car which was negligently driven across a public street,⁷ the company has been held liable.

(d) Injuries from Horses Taking Fright — aa. AT STANDING CARS. — A railroad company is not liable for personal injuries resulting from a horse taking fright at the appearance of a car standing in a freight yard.⁸ But it has been held to be negligence for a railroad company to leave a car standing on or near a public highway, and damages have been recovered for personal injuries attributable to this cause.⁹

bb. AT MOVING TRAINS. — The fact that horses are frightened by the sight of moving cars, locomotives, or trains, or by the noise naturally incident to their ordinary operation, does not render the railroad company liable for personal injuries resulting therefrom.¹⁰ And the fact that the track is laid along a O'Neil, 172 Ill. 527 (car door swinging outward); Chesapeake, etc., R. Co. v. Davis, (Ky. 1900) 60 S. W. Rep. 14, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1156 (piece of iron swinging from car).

3. Failure to Notify Party Injured of Peril. — Sullivan v. Vicksburg, etc., R. Co., 39 La. Ann. 800, 4 Am. St. Rep. 239 (extraordinary projection of brake); L., etc., R. Co. v. Montgomery, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 477 (handles of tool chest projecting beyond car).

4. Deraiment of Cars — No Liability to Trespasser. — Holland v. Sparks, 92 Ga. 753.

5. Liable for Death of Track Repairer. — Swadley v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 118 Mo. 268, 40 Am. St. Rep. 366. But recovery cannot be had under a complaint drawn under a statute making the company liable for the negligence of those in charge of the train, if the proximate cause of the accident was the defective track.

public street does not affect the liability of the company,¹ unless the injury results from the manner in which the track is laid,² or the train is being operated during prohibited hours.³

cc. AT STARTLING AND UNUSUAL NOISES. — So the fact that a horse is frightened by the whistle or escaping steam of a locomotive does not render a railroad company liable for personal injuries resulting therefrom, if the whistle was sounded⁴ or the steam emitted⁵ in the necessary and proper operation of the railroad. But if the acts were wantonly and maliciously,⁶ or negligently,⁷ or unnecessarily⁸ done, the railroad company is liable. Whether the sounding of the whistle or the emitting of the steam was necessary and proper or not is a question of fact for the jury.⁹

dd. FAILURE TO STOP TRAIN OR CEASE NOISE. — Although there is no obligation upon those in charge of a train to keep a lookout on adjacent premises or streets to observe the effect of the movement or noise of the train upon teams,¹⁰ yet, if the engineer sees that a team has been frightened, and that Sounding Whistle under Highway Bridge. — Whether the act of sounding a whistle under a highway bridge is such an act of negligence as to render the company liable for personal injuries resulting from a horse upon the bridge taking fright is a disputed question. In Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Barnett, 59 Pa. St. 259, 98 Am. Dec. 346, it was held to be an act of gross negligence; in Mitchell v. Nashville, etc., R. Co., 100 Tenn. 329, the act was held to be prima facie negligence; in Kelsey v. New York, etc., R. Co., (Mass. 1902) 63 N. E. Rep. 8, and Phillips v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 84 Hun (N. an accident is imminent, it is his duty to cease the noise,¹ and, if necessary, to stop the train,² and a failure to do so constitutes negligence.

(e) Putting Detached Cars in Motion. — It has been held to be negligence for the servants of a railroad company to put a detached car in motion without placing a brakeman upon it to give warning of its approach or to control its movement.³ And irrespective of the presence of a brakeman, it has been held to be negligence for those having the charge of trains to make flying switches within towns or cities,⁴ especially upon tracks running through public streets,⁵ or station grounds,⁶ or along a wharf at which a steamboat is discharging its passengers,⁷ or along a track intersected by public crossings,⁸ or at points where the public are accustomed to cross the track⁹ or to use it as a footpath.¹⁰ But it has been held not to be negligence per se to move cars in this way in a switch yard from which the public are excluded.¹¹

(f) Running Trains or Engines Backwards. — Whether it is negligence or not for the servants of a railroad company to run an engine backwards or push cars ahead of an engine without stationing some one on the tender or foremost car to signal its approach to a person who may be on the track, is a question which is controlled by the circumstances under which the engine or train is operated. Under some circumstances the act has been held to be negligence as a matter of law,¹² but in most cases it has been held to be a question of

(g) Coupling Up to Cars Which Are Being Loaded or Unloaded. — When a railroad company places freight cars upon a side track for the purpose of being loaded or unloaded by the owners of the freight, and such owners, their agents or servants, with the express or implied consent of the company, proceed to load or unload the freight, the company in such case has no right to run or back a train in upon the side track so as to move the car which is being loaded or unloaded, without special notice or warning to those so engaged;² and the same principle applies to the movement of trains upon adjacent tracks upon which such servants or agents are required to stand in prosecuting the work.³

(h) Ordinary Operation of Trains — aa. GENERAL STATEMENT. — Though a railroad company is the absolute owner of its track, and has the right to its full and unmolested use, it is nevertheless liable for injury resulting from the ordinary movements of its trains to a person on or near its track, though a trespasser, where the injury is wilfully or wantonly inflicted; and the rule is often stated that a railroad owes no duty to one wrongfully on its tracks, except to refrain from wantonness or wilfulness, or such gross negligence as amounts to wantonness.⁴

bb. CARE BEFORE DISCOVERY OF PERSON ON TRACK—(aa) In General.—This latter proposition as interpreted by the majority of the decisions, however, is but equivalent to saying that a railroad is not required to anticipate the presence of a trespasser on or near its tracks, and is under no duty to exercise care and diligence, until his presence and peril are discovered.¹ The duty of exercising reasonable care to avoid injuring a trespasser does not necessarily arise at the moment he is seen by the railroad's employees, but at the moment the peril of his position becomes known, or at least should become known by the exercise of reasonable care after the discovery of the person's presence on the track.²

(bb) Application of Rule to Children.—The general rule declaring that a railroad company owes to a trespasser no duty, except to use ordinary care to avoid injuring him after the discovery of his presence and peril, has been held to apply to infants, as well as adults,³ but the authorities are not harmonious upon this question.¹

(cc) Effect of Reasonable Apprehension of Presence on Track. — Where a railroad company has reason to apprehend that its tracks may not be clear at a certain point, as is often true in cities and populous districts, it will be actionable negligence for the railroad's servants to act on the assumption that the track is clear, and its liability will not be limited to want of care after the actual discovery of the dangerous position of a person on the track; especially is this so if there has been such use of the tracks as to amount to a license.² But it has been held that as against a bare license a railroad company has a right to run its trains in the usual way, without special precautions, if the circumstances do not of themselves give warning of his probable presence, and he is not seen until it is too late.³

cc. CARE AFTER DISCOVERY OF PERSON. — When persons in charge of a train discover the presence and perilous condition of one on the track, though a trespasser, or though guilty of contributory negligence, it becomes their duty to use reasonable care to prevent injury, and if the injury could have been prevented by the exercise of such care, the company will be liable.⁴

Uninclosed Premises Likely to Attract Children — In *Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. dd. CARE REQUIRED IN TOWNS AND CITIES. — A railroad company is chargeable with a greater degree of diligence in the operation and management of its trains in towns and cities than is required in less populous districts.¹ But it has been held, when a railroad company has an exclusive right of way running parallel with and adjoining a public street through a populous town, that although the tracks be used by the public habitually as a footpath, the same degree of care to avoid injury to persons using the tracks is not required as would be required if the tracks were upon the public street or highway.²

ee. CARE REQUIRED AT CROSSINGS. — A full discussion of the care required of railroads at crossings will be found elsewhere in this work.³

ff. PRESUMPTION THAT PERSON ON OR NEAR TRACK WILL AVOID COLLISION. — The law presumes that a person walking upon a railroad will leave the track in time to avoid injury from an approaching train of which he has knowledge, or should have by the ordinary use of the senses of hearing and seeing, or, if not on the track, that he will not get thereon; and the managers of the train may, after seeing such person, act upon this presumption,⁴ unless there is reason an engineer may be incidentally able to give will not, it is held, relieve the company, if that lookout is not a proper and reasonable lookout.¹ And if, by reason of their duties, either the fireman or the engineer, or both, are so hindered that a proper lookout cannot be kept, then it is the duty of the defendant to have a third person employed for that duty.²

did not see him when struck, this was negligence, because the defendant must have seen him if the engineer had kept a proper lookout, and that this negligence would make the defendant liable for the injury resulting from such negligence.

Use of Headlight as Aiding Proper Lookout. — It has been held that where an engine was run at night without a headlight, and a person lying on the track was injured, if the jury found that a headlight would have enabled the defendant, by due diligence on the part of its servant, to see the intestate in time to stop the train before reaching him, then the failure to provide a headlight and have it at the front was a continuing negligent omission of duty, the performance of which would have given the defendant the last clear chance to prevent the injury, and therefore made its negligence the proximate cause of the injury. Lloyd v. Albemarle, etc., R. Co., 118 N. Car. 1010, 54 Am. St. Rep. 764. To the same effect see Stanley v. Durham, etc., R. Co., 120 N. Car. 514. See also Gammage v. Atlanta, etc., R. Co., 97 Ga. 62. St. Rep. 681; Little Rock, etc., R. Co. v. Wilson, 90 Tenn. 271, 25 Am. St. Rep. 693. This duty is imposed in favor of trespassers. Felton v. Newport, (C. C. A.) 92 Fed. Rep. 470.

The mere fact that the company maintained a lookout will not relieve it from responsibility for an injury in the absence of proof that the person injured could not have been seen by the exercise of due care. Felton v. Newport, 105 Fed. Rep. 332, 44 C. C. A. 530; East Tennessee, etc., R. Co. v. White, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 540.

But the statute does not apply whenever obedience is impossible, as where the employees of a railway company are engaged in the distribution of detached cars in the making up of trains, and in their necessary switching in and upon its yards, depot grounds, and side-tracks, Southern R. Co. v. Pugh, 95 Tenn. 419; or if the impossibility arises from the sudden appearance of a person on the track, East Tennessee, etc., R. Co. v. Scales, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 688.

And it has been held that this principle of emancipation from the operation of the statute is not confined to any locality known as yards, station grounds, or depot grounds, but applied as well to adjacent grounds and to any place where the company must inevitably engage in movements and manoeuvres that practically force it to move trains or cuts of cars by pushing instead of pulling with the engine in front as contemplated by the statute. Towles v. Southern R. Co., 103 Fed. Rep. 405.

The common law and not the statute, it has been held, prescribes the rule of action for railway companies in such situations. Southern R. Co. v. Pugh, 95 Tenn. 419; Towles v. Southern R. Co., 103 Fed. Rep. 405.

Arkansas Statute — Contributory Negligence as Defense. — Under the statute in Arkansas requiring railroads to keep a constant lookout for persons upon their tracks, it has been held that where a person is struck while upon or near the tracks and he is not seen by the employees in charge of the train, there is sufficient evidence to support a finding that they were negligent in not keeping a proper lookout; but if he was walking along the track and knew that it was about the hour for a train to pass along, and made no reasonable effort by looking or listening to inform himself of the train's approach, these were circumstances showing that he was guilty of contributory negligence which would defeat a recovery.

Jurisdictions Holding Lookout Unnecessary. — But according to the prevailing rule, founded on the principle that there is no duty devolving upon the servants of a railroad to anticipate or expect an unlawful trespass on its right of way, no duty exists to keep a vigilant lookout for a trespasser in the absence of some special fact or reason which calls for diligence in this particular.¹

Trespassers in Yard. — As moving engines and cars to and fro in the yard of a railroad company is indispensable to safe and proper conduct of its business, it should be no more obliged to look out especially for the presence of those who may go there without right than for trespassers on the main track away from the yard. McDermott v. Kentucky Cent. R. Co., 93 Ky. 412.

Failure of Fireman Not on Duty to Keep Lookout. — If a fireman of the company who is not on duty, but is being transported from one place to another on the company's engine, and whose presence upon the engine is simply for the purpose of being transported, fails to keep a lookout for persons on the track, his failing so to do is not negligence upon the part of the company where there was also a regular fireman on the engine. Licenseses. — If a person injured went upon the tracks with the license and invitation of the defendant, then its employees were bound to keep a lookout for him; and if, by the exercise of ordinary care, he might have been discovered in his perilous situation in time to have avoided the injury, the defendant is liable. Murphy v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 38 Iowa 542; Clainpit v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 84 Iowa 71; Heiss v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 103 Iowa 592; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Schuster, (Ky. 1888) 7 S. W. Rep. 874.

the direct and proximate cause of an infant's death is the negligence of the defendant in failing to keep a reasonable lookout and to discover the child in time to have prevented the injury, it is as much liable in damages as if the proximate cause of the injury had been its negligence after discovering the child upon its tracks.¹ But in other jurisdictions no duty to maintain a lookout is required, even to discover children.²

(cc) Place of Apprehended Danger. — Where there is reason to apprehend that the track may not be clear, as in the case of tracks running through cities or other populous districts where persons are in the habit of crossing or walking on the tracks, the persons operating the train cannot act on the presumption that the track is clear, and so fail to maintain a proper lookout, without making the company responsible for the consequences.³ Especially is this true, according to some authorities, where the trespassers are children,⁴ or where there is such a custom established on the part of the public of going upon the tracks, as to amount to a license.⁵ In such cases a failure to see is not alone sufficient to give rise to liability, but there must be a failure to see after the exercise of ordinary care.⁶

hh. SIGNALS AND WARNINGS — (aa) In General. — As a general rule, in the absence of statutes, a railroad company owes no duty to a trespasser to give notice of the approach of its trains by whistle, bell, or otherwise,⁷ and a failure to give such warning will not amount to negligence, unless the trespasser was discovered in time to give it.¹ But when a trespasser is seen upon the track, a different rule is to be applied. It is evident, however, that there can be no exact rule laid down as to the precise distance at which it becomes the duty of the servants of the railroad to give the danger signal, and it may be stated generally that it is the duty of the engineer or other person in charge of a moving train who sees the peril of a person upon the track to give timely warning of its approach.²

Failure to Give Signal Must Be Proximate Cause of Injury. — But no liability will arise from the failure to give a signal, if such failure is not the proximate cause of the injury,³ as where the approach of the train was known to the person injured in time to have avoided the injury.⁴

statute, it is the duty of those in charge of a train to give notice of its approach at all points of known or reasonably apprehended danger. And accordingly, if a railway company has notice that a large number of persons are in the habit of using its track at a particular place for the purpose of a crossing or footpath, and it takes no steps to prevent this use, a failure to give warning of the approach of a train to such place will amount to actionable negligence.¹

Person Standing Idly on Track. — But it has been held that there is no duty on the part of the railroad to give warning to a person idly standing on the tracks at a place in the company's yards where the public are in the habit of crossing.²

Backing Train. — As a general rule, the mere fact that a train is being backed does not impose upon the servants of a railroad the duty to give signals of its approach at points on the track not frequented by the public, and where persons cannot reasonably be expected to be.³ But negligence may be inferred from the backing of a train in a populous locality where persons are at all times crossing the tracks, if no bell is rung or other signal given.⁴

(cc) Crossing Signals. — The prevailing rule is that the statutory signals required by the various statutes to be given at public crossings are intended for the benefit of those using the crossing as a highway and not for mere trespassers on other parts of the track, and a failure to give such warning cannot be taken advantage of by the trespasser.⁵ And the same rule has been applied

Starting Train at Depot. — Where a train has been standing for some time near a depot at a village or town over an approach to the depot, it has been intimated that it is the duty of those in charge of the train to give a proper signal before starting, and that a failure to do so will render the company liable to a person injured, unless the starting of the train did not contribute directly to the injury. Barkley v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 96 Mo. 367.

But under statute in Illinois, making it unlawful for any engineer on a railroad to start his train at any station or within any city, incorporated town or village, without ringing the bell or sounding the whistle a reasonable time before starting, it was held that the question whether the person injured was a trespasser, and whether the defendant was guilty of wilful or wanton conduct against such trespasser, were questions for the jury. Where the Depot Building and Grounds of a Railroad Company in a City Were Not Inclosed, it was the duty of the company, in backing a train for the purpose of coupling it to cars standing near the passenger platform, to have a servant on the platform or on the standing cars to warn trespassers or intruders on the tracks or on the cars of the danger, and its failure to do so was gross negligence, rendering it liable to plaintiff, an infant between five and six years old, who was on the platform of one of the standing cars, and who by the sudden movement of the cars was caught between the car and the "bumper" at the end of the track. where there was a failure to give the statutory warning to a person walking along a railroad track, though the injury occurred at the intersection of the track and public highway.¹ In some jurisdictions, however, it has been held that though the failure to give the statutory signal is not negligence, as a matter of law, relatively to a trespasser, it may be a fact to which the jury may look in determining the question of negligence.² But if the failure to give a signal has no influence in producing the injury, no liability will arise therefrom.³

(dd) Violation of Statute or Municipal Ordinance. — The disobedience of a statute⁴ or ordinance⁵ requiring the giving of signals within the limits of cities, towns, etc., is frequently held to be negligence. But in Illinois it has been held that a railroad company in the operation of its trains owes no duty to a trespasser upon its right of way or tracks, except that of not wantonly or wilfully inflicting injury upon him, and that the mere fact that the signals required by statutes and ordinances are not given, even though those operating its trains may have knowledge of the fact that persons have been in the habit of crossing its tracks or walking upon them, at places other than public crossings or public places, will not amount to proof of wilful or wanton disregard of the duty towards such trespasser.⁶

(ee) Running Train Without Headlight. — It has been held to be a high degree of negligence for a railroad company to run a train on a dark night without a headlight.⁷ On the other hand, it has been held that a trespasser cannot complain that there was no headlight on an engine, on the principle that a railroad company is not required to use care to anticipate the peril of a trespasser.¹

(ff) Mode of Giving Signals. — The parties in charge of a railroad train do not perform their whole duty, under all circumstances, by pursuing the regulation method of giving notice by the ringing of a bell or following out any prescribed mode of giving warning. The precautions to be adopted and the steps to be taken in aid of safety increase as the danger of accident and injury is increased, and their sufficiency is to be gauged by what is called for by the circumstances of each case.²

(gg) Duty to Heed Signal of Stranger. — The rule has been laid down that an engineer is not required to heed a signal to stop his train given by a stranger, when no danger is in sight or may reasonably be apprehended.³ On the other hand, it has been held that an instruction that "in the due and proper management of its trains and the movement thereof the defendant's employees were not required, as a matter of law, to notice and obey signals given by persons not in the employ of the defendant company," is erroneous.⁴ And it has been held that a railroad company is liable for the failure of its engineer to heed the warning of a third person, where he had already seen children near the track, though not on it, if by heeding the warning he could have stopped the train in time to avoid the injury.⁵

ii. RATE OF SPEED — (aa) In General. — As a matter of law, in the absence of statutory or municipal regulation, no rate of speed at which a railroad train may be run constitutes negligence per se, so far as persons on or near the track are concerned.⁶ But a railroad is not, even in the absence of statute or municipal ordinance on the subject, absolved from all duty to the public in this respect, and the rate of speed of trains may be taken into consideration by the jury along with other circumstances in determining the question of

In Towns and Cities. — Thus, an exception to the general rule allowing railroads to regulate their rate of speed exists in the case of trains running* through towns and cities or other populous districts generally, where persons may be expected to be on the track, the question of negligence in such case being one for the jury.²

Passing Station When Train Is Receiving or Discharging Passengers. — So, negligence has been inferred where a railroad company runs a train at a high rate of speed past a station where a passenger train is receiving or discharging passengers or is pulling into the station, especially when the track on which the train is moving is between the station and the track on which the passenger train is standing or moving.³ And this rule has been applied though the person injured did not sustain the relation of passenger to the defendant company.⁴

(bb) Violation of Statute or Ordinance Regulating Speed. — In some cases it is held that the running of railroad trains within the limits of a town or city or village at a rate of speed greater than is allowed by ordinances of such town or city or village, or by statute, is negligence per se.⁵ In Illinois, under statute, such evidence is regarded as prima facie proof of negligence.¹ In other cases the rule is that such an act on the part of the railroad company is always to be considered by the jury as, at least, a circumstance from which negligence may be inferred in determining whether the company was or was not guilty of negligence.²

In Kentucky, the running of trains at a rate of speed in violation of a municipal ordinance is not negligence, and such ordinance is inadmissible for the purpose of showing negligence.³

Contributory Negligence as Defense.— But it must appear, even where the violation of the ordinance is regarded as negligence per se, that the injury complained of was occasioned by such unauthorized speed of the train, without any direct contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff himself.⁴ And the fact that the person injured was a trespasser has been held to amount to contributory negligence, within the meaning of the rule.⁵ On the other hand, it has been held that the mere fact that the person injured is a trespasser is immaterial, where the excessive rate of speed was the proximate cause of the injury.¹

jj. FREQUENT OR SPECIAL TRAINS — Frequency of Trains. — The rules which regulate the distance at which trains shall run from each other on a railroad are, it has been held, intended solely for the protection of the property of the company and the safety of the employees and passengers, and not for persons who may be traveling along the highway; and no inference of negligence can be drawn from the proximity of trains in an action to recover damages for an injury done to a person while crossing the railroad track at a place not known or used as a public crossing.²

Special Trains. — So, it has been held that a railroad company has the right to run special trains at such times, on such terms, and at such increased rates of speed, within the limits of prudence and safety to its passengers, as the necessities or convenience of its business may require; and hence a charge of the court is erroneous which assumes or implies that the running of trains off schedule time or at increased rates of speed is, per se, negligence.³

kk. DUTY TO STOP TRAIN. — A person managing a locomotive is not required to check the speed of his train or to take measures to stop it whenever any one is seen on or near the track, since to stop for every mere possibility of danger would not only hinder public travel, but would endanger the safety of passengers in view of the necessity of making time to avoid collisions; but he is required to do so only when the perilous position of such person has been discovered and the circumstances are such that no presumption arises that such person will leave the track or otherwise avoid the collision.⁴

track, and, indeed, to some extent after his dangerous position is realized, even if there was time to stop the train, will not render the company liable, provided the proper signals of warning have been given.¹

Indistinguishable Object On or Near Track. — There is no duty resting upon the men in charge of a train to stop or slow up at the sight of every object upon the track the precise nature of which cannot be understood, unless it be such as from its appearance and the surrounding circumstances is of a character to indicate danger either to the object or to the train. Hence, if the engineer or other person in charge of the train honestly mistakes a child or other helpless person for some inanimate object, or animal other than a human being, until it is too late to avoid the injury, the company will not be liable.² On the other hand, it has been held that the railroad company will be liable if, after discovering an object on or near its track, the trainmen fail to exercise the requisite degree of care in discovering that it was a child or other helpless person or to endeavor to avoid injury after such discovery.³

(7) Contributory Negligence — (a) Voluntarily Occupying Place of Danger — aa. IN GENERAL. — If a person without any reasonable necessity therefor occupies a place on or near a railroad track which he knows to be dangerous, or which, by the exercise of ordinary observation or forethought, he might have known to be so, he cannot complain of any injury of which his negligence was thus the proximate cause.⁴

bb. SLEEPING ON TRACK. — To go to sleep upon a railroad track is an act of

Under Statute in Tennessee it has been held that where an object appears on a railroad track in front of a train, and so near as to make it impossible for all the precautions to be observed before the collision, it is the duty of the engineer first to use those precautions most likely to prevent an accident, such, for instance, as blowing the whistle to frighten the object off. Memphis, etc., R. abstraction,¹ or so absorbed in conversation,² or in the contemplation of some object near the track,³ as to fail to note an approaching train, or hear its warning signal,⁴ or the calls of those who would apprise him of his peril,⁵ he is guilty of such negligence as to bar an action for the injury, and the fact that the track in the direction whence the train came was obscured by smoke,⁶ or that the sound of the approaching train was drowned by some nearer and louder noise,⁷ is immaterial; for any impediment to the use of either sense, instead of being an excuse for his want of care, ought rather to have warned him of the necessity of exercising a higher diligence in the use of the other. A fortiori this is true when the impediment to the use of his senses is produced by the act of the person himself.¹

bb. CROSSING TRACKS AT STATIONS. — But this principle does not apply to persons alighting from or intending to take a train at a station, and who are compelled to cross a track between the train and the station. Persons in such a situation have a right to assume that trains will not be run upon the intervening track at such a time at a high rate of speed, or without giving proper warning of their approach, and it is not contributory negligence to act upon this assumption and to cross such track without stopping to look or listen.²

cc. EMPLOYEES WHOSE DUTIES REQUIRE THEIR PRESENCE UPON TRACK. — Nor does the principle apply to employees whose duties require their presence upon the track, the performance of which duties necessarily precludes their paying the strictest attention to the approach of trains.³ Whether a person in such a situation is guilty of negligence in failing to note the approach of a train is generally a question of fact to be determined by the jury, in view of all the circumstances.⁴

(c) Attempting to Cross Track in Front of Approaching Train. — One who attempts to cross a railroad track in front of a train which he sees approaching is guilty of negligence and cannot recover damages for an injury sustained,⁵ although the train was running at a higher rate of speed than was customary⁶ or permitted by ordinance,¹ and although the engineer failed to blow the whistle² or stop the train at a railroad crossing just before,³ since the plaintiff's own negligence, and not that of the railroad company, is the proximate cause of the injury.

(d) Remaining on Track with Knowledge of Approaching Train. — If a person, knowing that a train is approaching, remains upon the track until it is too late for him to escape injury, he is guilty of such negligence as to bar his action for damages,⁴ even though the train was running at an illegal speed.⁵

(e) Mismanagement of Horses Frightened by Train. — It has been held to be negligence to leave a team of horses unhitched near a railroad track at a time when a train may reasonably be expected, and no damages can be recovered for personal injuries sustained in an endeavor to avoid the consequence of such negligence.⁶ So it has been held to be negligence to drive a horse too near to a track at a crossing before stopping to look or listen for an approaching train,⁷ or to attempt to hold a frightened horse near a train,⁸ or to lead him up to it,⁹ when he might as easily have been driven away. Whether it is negligence in a person to drive a skittish team into a railroad freight yard¹⁰ has been held to be a question of fact for the jury.

(f) Acts Done or Omitted in Emergencies. — A person rightfully on or near a railroad track is not precluded from recovering for an injury received from passing trains because he may, when confronted with the sudden peril to which the negligence of the company exposed him, have acted imprudently or have omitted some act which would have saved him from injury,¹¹ but his

(8) Presumption of Negligence. — In the absence of statute, the fact that a person is injured by being struck by a railroad train,² or that his dead body was found beside the track,³ raises no presumption of negligence on the part of the railroad company; but in some of the states statutes have been enacted providing that proof of an injury inflicted by the movement of trains shall be prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the company.⁴

the purpose or motive of the sale is lawful is immaterial.¹ But any property which is not necessary to the exercise of the corporate franchise, a railroad company may sell and transfer like a private corporation.² In determining what property a railroad company may sell without special statutory authority, it is necessary to observe the distinction between property which is necessary to the exercise of the corporate franchise and property which is required for the transaction of the business of the company. The right of way, with the tracks, station buildings, etc., cannot be separated from the corporate franchise, but the rolling stock and other items of personal property, while necessary to the transaction of the business of the company, are not in any way connected with the franchise.³

(b) Power to Buy. — The correlative of the proposition that a railroad company has no power, except by legislative grant, to sell its franchise and the property connected therewith is that such a corporation cannot buy the franchise and property of another company. This is obviously true, because, if a railroad company cannot divest itself of its rights and title by such a transaction, then it follows that another company cannot so acquire any rights.⁴

Statutory Authority to Buy. — In some jurisdictions there are general statutes which authorize railroads to purchase the property and franchises of other companies.⁵

Connecting or Branch Roads. — It has been held that the plain intent of such statutes is to improve transportation facilities for the benefit of the public and not prevent competition between railroads, and that therefore the authority to purchase does not give to a railroad company the right to purchase a parallel or competing line, but extends only to connecting or branch roads.⁶

Parallel or Competing Lines. — In some states by statute or constitutional pro-

Property Acquired under Right of Eminent Domain Not Alienable. — Singleton v. Southwestern R. Co., 70 Ga. 464.

Sale of Part of Road. — Since a railroad company cannot sell its franchise and corporate rights, it cannot sell a division of its road with the franchise pertaining thereto and thus create another company. Furthermore, this would be the creation of a corporation by a corporation. State v. Morgan, 28 La. Ann. 482.

Sale of Part of Franchise. — It has also been held that a railroad company has no power to sell a part of its franchise, as, for instance, the exclusive right to carry passengers and freight over a part of its road. Tippecanoe County v. Lafayette, etc., R. Co., 50 Ind. 85. See also State v. Minnesota Cent. R. Co., 36 Minn. 246.

1. Purpose or Motive of Sale Not Material. — Arthur v. Commercial, etc., Bank, 9 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 394, 48 Am. Dec. 719, in which the purpose of the sale was to raise money to complete the road within the time limited by the vendor's charter, and thus avoid a forfeiture.

2. Property Not Necessary to Franchise. — Pierce v. Emery, 32 N. H. 484.

3. Distinctions Noted. — Boston, etc., R. Co. v. Gilmore, 37 N. H. 410.

4. No Authority to Buy in Absence of Statute.

— Branch v. Jesup, 106 U. S. 468; Branch v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 3 Woods (U. S.) 481; Mackintosh v. Flint, etc., R. Co., 34 Fed. Rep. 582; Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Morris, 67 Tex. 692; East Line, etc., R. Co. v. Rushing, 69 Tex. 306.

5. Statutory Authority to Buy. — Venner v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 28 Fed. Rep. 581; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Com., 97 Ky. 675, affirmed 161 U. S. 677. And see the statutes of the several states.

To authorize a sale, the power to sell and the power of the purchaser to acquire title by the sale must both exist. East Line, etc., R. Co. v. State, 75 Tex. 434.

The Power to Build a Railroad does not include the power to buy one. Campbell v. Marietta, etc., R. Co., 23 Ohio St. 168. See also Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Morris, 67 Tex. 692. But see Branch v. Jesup, 106 U. S. 468, in which it was held that the power granted to a railroad company to construct a particular line of railroad carried with it by implication the right to purchase such line of railroad subsequently built by another company.

The power to buy, however, has been said to be dependent on and involved in the right to build a road, and therefore it was held that where a railroad company, authorized by its charter to build a branch road within a time limited, had forfeited such right by nonuser within the time specified, it could not buy a branch road afterwards built by another concern. Camden, etc., R. Co. v. May's Landing, etc., R. Co., 48 N. J. L. 530.

6. Statute Held Applicable Only to Branch or Connecting Roads. — Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Com., 97 Ky. 675, affirmed 161 U. S. 677.

vision railroad companies are expressly prohibited from purchasing parallel or competing lines.¹

(2) Effect of Unauthorized Sale. — An unauthorized sale of its property by a railroad company is ineffectual for any purpose. It does not either divest the vendor of any rights or vest any rights in the purchaser.² Neither does such a transaction relieve the vendor of any of the duties and responsibilities imposed by its charter.³

Ground of Forfeiture. — But it may constitute a ground of forfeiture of the charter of the vendor and of the purchaser also, when the conveyance is to another railroad company.⁴

b. STATUTORY AUTHORITY TO SELL — (1) In General. — It is competent for the legislature to confer on a railroad company the power to sell its franchise or any of its property, and this is often done. When the authority has been so given, the company may sell, regardless of the distinction between property essential to the exercise of the franchise and the property which is used merely for the transaction of the company's business.⁵ Under such Atchison*, etc., R. Co., 46 Fed. Rep. 888; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Com., 97 Ky. 675, affirmed 161 U. S. 677; Catawissa R. Co. v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 14 Pa. Co. Ct. 280, 3 Pa. Dist. 111, 34 W. N. C. (Pa.) 11; East Line, etc., R. Co. v. Rushing, 69 Tex. 306. See also the statutes and constitutions of the several states.

What Are Competing Lines. — If only a small amount of the traffic of one road will in any event pass over the other road, so that the rates of transportation are not appreciably affected, they are not competing lines. Kimball v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 46 Fed. Rep. 888; Dady v. Georgia, etc., R. Co., 112 Fed. Rep. 838. See also Burke v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., 10 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 525, 21 Cinc. L. Bul. 11. And see infra, this section, Leases.

Connection May Be by Means of Third Road. — Hafer v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co., 11 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 760, 29 Cinc. L. Bul. 68, 4 Ohio Dec. 487.

Competing Character Not Established by Fact of Intersection. — East Line, etc., R. Co. v. Rushing, 69 Tex. 306.

Judicial Notice of Competing Character. — Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. State, 72 Tex. 404, 13 Am. St. Rep. 815.

"Parallel" Distinguished from "Competing." — The proper construction of the phrase a "parallel or competing line" is that it includes a projected road, surveyed, laid out, and in process of construction, if such road, when completed and in operation, would actually compete with the road seeking control. Before completion it is "parallel;" when completed it becomes "competing." Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Com., (Pa. 1886) 7 Atl. Rep. 368.

For a Further Discussion as to what constitutes competing lines, see the title CONSOLIDATION OF CORPORATIONS, vol. 6, pp. 804, 826.

2. Unauthorized Sale Ineffectual for Any Purpose. — Thus, it has been held that the purchaser cannot hold a stockholder liable on his subscription to the stock of the vendor company, though such stockholder assented to the sale. New Orleans, etc., R. Co. v. Harris, 27 Miss. 517. But the stockholder is still liable to the vendor on his subscription. Hays v. Ottawa, etc., R. Co., 61 Ill. 422.

3. Vendor Not Relieved of Any Duties or Responsibilities. — Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Morris, 67 Tex. 692; East Line, etc., R. Co. v. Rushing, 69 Tex. 306; Naglee v. Alexandria, etc., R. In Texas there is no statutory provision authorizing the sale or transfer of the franchise of a railroad corporation, except under deed of trust, order of sale, or execution for the payment of debts. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Owens, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas., § 385.

The Obligations of the Vendor to the Public are not released by a mere grant of authority to sell. There must be a legislative release from the obligations of the vendor to the public. Chollette v. Omaha, etc., R. Co., 26 Neb. 159.

Power to Mortgage Does Not Include Power to Sell. — Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Esquibel, 4 N. Mex. 337.

Power to Buy Held Not to Include Power to Sell. — Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Esquibel, 4 N. Mex. 337.

What Constitutes Grant of Power to Sell. — Authority to sell the road is not given by a provision in the charter that the company and its successors "shall be capable of purchasing, holding, and conveying any lands, tenements, goods, and chattels whatever, necessary and expedient to the objects of this incorporation." Such a provision authorized property to be sold and conveyed away only when such a transaction is necessary or expedient to the objects of the incorporation, and those objects cannot require that the necessary source of the power the company may sell the line of railroad constructed by it and build a new line for the purpose of continuing the object of its incorporation.¹

Implied Authority to Sell. — A provision in the charter of a railroad company authorizing it to buy the property and franchise of a certain other company impliedly gives to such other company authority to sell.²

Extent of Power of Sale. — The power to sell may be given in respect to all the property and franchises of the company, or it may be limited to a part only, and the fact that the exercise of the power given results in a suspension of business of the vendor as a railroad company has been held not to forfeit the charter.³ And since the legislature has the power to grant or withhold such authority at pleasure, it may couple with the grant such conditions and limitations as it may choose to impose.⁴ Thus the power to sell may be limited to the case of a company which, after beginning the construction of its road, becomes unable to complete it,⁵ while, on the other hand, it is sometimes provided that no railroad company shall sell its property or franchise until its road has been constructed.⁶ So, too, a sale may be permitted only when the purchaser owns a road running in the same general direction as the road of the selling company,⁷ or when all the debts of the selling company shall have been paid or arranged for,⁸ or a sale may be forbidden where the purchaser is the owner of a parallel or competing line,⁹ or is a foreign corporation.¹⁰

The Effect of a Sale by a railroad company of its corporate franchise, pursuant to legislative authority, operates as a surrender of the charter and a grant by the legislature of a similar charter to the purchasers, so that the franchise in the hands of the purchasers is subject to all the provisions of the constitution existing at the time of their purchase.¹¹

(2) Rights and Liabilities of Purchasers — (a) Rights of Purchasers. — The General Rule is that the purchaser of a railroad succeeds by the purchase to all the rights which the vendor company had,¹² and is also subject to any equities in company's profitable existence should be sold and conveyed away. Kean v. Johnson, 9 N. J. Eq. 401. See also Branch v. Jesup, 106 U. S. 478.

What Constitutes Sale. — A lease for nine hundred and ninety-nine years, reserving rent payable quarterly, is not a sale within the meaning of a deed conveying the right of way to the lessor company on condition that if the company should sell the right of way, the grantor in the deed should receive half the proceeds. Morrison v. St. Paul, etc., R. Co., 63 Minn. 75.

But a grant or demise by a railroad company in perpetuity of all its property, real and personal, and all the privileges and franchises which it had under its charter, is equivalent to an absolute conveyance. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Boyd, 118 Ill. 73.

2. Implied Authority to Sell. — New York, etc., R. Co. v. New York, etc., R. Co., 52 Conn. 274.

3. Sale of Part of Franchise Authorized by Statute. — State v. St. Paul, etc., R. Co., 35 Minn. 222.

Stock Subscriptions. — Under the Ohio statute authorizing any railroad company under certain circumstances to sell its property, including "all work done, together with all rights, privileges, and easements," does not confer authority to sell or transfer subscriptions to the capital stock, to be paid when the road should be completed. Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Hinsdale, 45 Ohio St. 556.

4. Power of Legislature to Impose Conditions. — State v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 89 Mo. 523; Frazier v. East Tennessee, etc., R. Co., 88 Tenn. 138. See also infra, this section, Liabilities of Purchasers.

5. Inability to Complete Road. — Young v. Toledo, etc., R. Co., 76 Mich. 485. Under such a statute it has been held that one railroad company may purchase the stock of another company which has become unable to complete the construction of its road. Dewey v. Toledo, etc., R. Co., 91 Mich. 351.

6. Sale Before Construction of Road Forbidden. — Clarke v. Omaha, etc., R. Co., 4 Neb. 458.

7. Purchaser Having Road Running in Same Direction as Vendor's Road. — East Line, etc., R. Co. v. State, 75 Tex. 434.

8. Payment of Vendor's Debts as Condition Precedent. — Mahaska County R. Co. v. Des Moines Valley R. Co., 28 Iowa 437, holding, however, that where the debts, if any, were insignificant in amount and the purchaser was ready to pay any that might be established, the sale was valid.

9. Parallel or Competing Lines. — The statutes authorizing railroad companies to purchase the lines of other companies generally restrict the right to connecting or branch roads and forbid the purchase of parallel or competing lines. See supra, this section, Power to Buy.

10. Sale to Foreign Railroad Company Forbidden. — East Line, etc., R. Co. v. State, 75 Tex. 434.

11. Effect of Sale of Franchise. — State v. Sherman, 22 Ohio St. 411.

12. Rights of Purchaser in General. — Pollard v. Maddox, 28 Ala. 321; Columbus, etc., R.

favor of third persons where the purchaser was chargeable with notice thereof.¹

Special Privileges and Exemptions. — A special statutory privilege or exemption granted to a railroad company, such as immunity from taxation and the like, does not pass by sale of the property and franchises of such company, unless it is expressly provided by statute that a sale shall have that effect.² So, too, it has been held that the right of a railroad company to a particular mode of assessment of damages for the appropriation of its property does not pass to a purchaser of the road.³

(b) Liabilities of Purchasers — aa. LIABILITIES TO PUBLIC. — The purchaser cannot hold and exercise the franchise of the vendor discharged of the duty to the public which was imposed as a condition of the grant.⁴

Liability for Taxes Assessed Before Sale. — Where the statute authorizing the sale provides that it shall be subject to all the duties and obligations prescribed by the railroad laws of the state, the purchaser is liable for taxes assessed against the vendor.⁵

Restriction as to Rates of Transportation. — In the absence of a statutory provision to the contrary, a railroad company which purchases the property and franchises of another company is subject to the same restrictions and limitations as to rates of transportation as was the vendor.⁶

Restoration of Highway at Crossing. — Where railroad companies are required by law to restore as near as may be any highway crossed by the railroad, and it is provided that on the sale by one company to another, of its property and franchises, the purchaser shall hold subject to all duties and obligations prescribed by the general railroad laws of the state, the duty of restoring a highway at a crossing devolves on the purchaser.⁷

bb. LIABILITIES TO INDIVIDUALS — (aa. Contracts of Vendor in General. — The purchaser does not, in consequence of the purchase, become bound by the personal obligations of the vendor company,⁸ unless such obligations had become liens on the property sold,¹ or the purchaser adopted the contract or assumed the liabilities under it, and thus became bound by its terms,² or the statute authorizing the sale imposed on the purchaser liability for the obligations of the vendor.³

Right to Lease Another Road. — Where the vendor had the right to lease another road, such right passes to the purchaser in a conveyance of all the rights, franchises, and property of the vendor. Atlantic, etc., R. Co. v. St. Louis, 66 Mo. 228.

Right to Connect with Other Roads. — Portland, etc., R. Co. v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 46 Me. 69.

Pass Given in Consideration of Release of Right of Way. — A railroad company which purchased the road of another company is not bound to honor a pass issued by the vendor in consideration of a release of the right of way,

(bb) Torts of Vendor in General. — A claim against a railroad company for a personal injury or other tort is not enforceable against a purchaser of the property and franchises of such company,⁴ unless the liability has been assumed by the contract of purchase⁵ or imposed by the statute authorizing the sale,⁶ or unless judgment on such claim was recovered before the sale and thus made a lien on the property.⁷ If the liability has not been thus assumed or made a lien on the property, the only remedy of the injured party after the dissolution of the vendor company is by an action against its stockholders.⁸

Maintenance of Nuisances. — According to the rule that the purchaser of a railroad is not liable for the torts of the vendor committed in the operation of the road, such purchaser is not liable for the original act constituting a nuisance, but if the act is continuing in its effects, the purchaser may become liable for injuries resulting after the purchase. The liability in this respect depends on the adoption or ratification by the purchaser of the original act. In the case of structures on the right of way, which obviously are dangerous or have a tendency to injure others, the purchaser will be liable for any injury resulting therefrom while he is operating the road,⁹ but the liability attaches only in the case of knowingly using a structure which is a nuisance.¹⁰ In the case, where the purchaser did not assume any of the obligations of the vendor, and did not use such right of way. Dickey v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 122 Mo. 223.

Where the Deed Recites the "Assumption" of the vendor's debts, liabilities, and obligations as the consideration of the sale and transfer, it operates as a promise by the purchaser to pay such debts, etc. Lenz v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 111 Wis. 198.

See also the railroad laws of the several states. In New Bedford R. Co. v. Old Colony R. Co., 120 Mass. 397, the statute authorizing the sale declared that the purchaser should "be subject to all the duties, liabilities, obligations, and restrictions" to which the vendor was subject.

9. Maintenance of Nuisance. — Willitts v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 88 Iowa 281 (embankment causing overflow of land); Culver v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 38 Mo. App. 130 (negligently constructed bridge causing overflow of plaintiff's land).

No Liability for Past Damages. — Post v. West Shore R. Co., 123 N. Y. 580; Coyle v. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co., 18 Pa. Super. Ct. 235.

10. Knowledge that Structure Is a Nuisance. — McDonald v. Southern California R. Co., 101 Cal. 206.

however, of structures not on the right of way, some positive act adopting them is necessary to charge the purchaser with liability.¹

(cc) Appropriation of or Injury to Private Property in Construction or Operation of Road. — A purchaser of the property and franchises of a railroad company is not liable for the value of land appropriated by the vendor for the construction of the road, in the absence of any assumption of such liability or use under the purchase of the land taken.² But by taking possession of the land and asserting a right to use it, the purchaser elects to adopt the original appropriation and to receive the benefit thereof, and by so doing becomes liable for the value of the land taken.³

Injury to Abutting Owners. — The purchaser of a railroad in a public street does not become liable, in consequence of the acquisition of ownership, for the injury to abutting property, but does become liable by continuing the operation of the road.⁴

c. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY OF CONTRACT. — The statutes authorizing the sale of the property and franchises of railroad companies generally prescribe, with more or less particularity, the mode of exercising such authority,⁵ and a sale made otherwise than as provided by the statute may be enjoined at the instance of the stockholders.⁶

Consent of Stockholders. — A usual provision of the statute authorizing the sale of railroad property and franchises is that the stockholders shall consent to the proposed sale or that they shall ratify the contract.⁷

Filing or Recording Certificate of Sale. — A certificate of sale is sometimes required to be filed in a public office of the state.⁸

3. Leases — a. POWER TO MAKE OR TAKE LEASES — (1) No Power unless Given by Statute. — It is not one of the general powers of a railroad company to make a lease of its own property or franchises, or to take a lease from another company, but such power can exist only pursuant to a legislative

1. Structures Not on Right of Way. — Thus, the purchaser of a railroad from a company which had constructed jetties in a river to protect a bridge over the river was held not liable for the overflow of adjacent lands in consequence of the failure to repair or remove the jetties, where they were not on the railroad property or right of way, and the purchaser had never adopted or assumed control of them. The mere failure to repair or remove the jetties was held not to create any liability. Fordyce v. Russell, 59 Ark. 312.

2. Land Taken by Vendor — Purchaser Not Liable Merely by Virtue of Purchase. — Pfeifer v. Sheboygan, etc., R. Co., 18 Wis. 155, 86 Am. Dec. 751, in which case the landowner had obtained a judgment against the vendor company for the land taken.

3. Liability Imposed by Use of Road. — Lake Erie, etc., R. Co. v. Griffin, 92 Ind. 487, 107 Ind. 464; Indiana, etc., R. Co. v. Allen, 113 Ind. 308, 3 Am. St. Rep. 650; Stickley v. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co., 93 Ky. 323; Drury v. Midland R. Co., 127 Mass. 571; Rio Grande, etc., Pass. R. Co. v. Ortiz, 75 Tex. 602; Pfeifer v. Sheboygan R. Co., 18 Wis. 155, 86 Am. Dec. 751.

Since the liability of the purchaser rests on the adoption of the original appropriation, an action at law on a judgment recovered by the landowner against the vendor company cannot be maintained against the purchaser. Gilman v. Sheboygan, etc., R. Co., 37 Wis. 317.

Liability for Costs of Condemnation Proceeding. — Frankel v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 70 Iowa 424.

4. Injury to Abutting Property. — Penn. Mut.

L. Ins. Co. v. Heiss, 141 Ill. 35, 33 Am. St. Rep. 273; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Orr, 91 Ky. 109.

5. See generally the statutes of the several states on this subject.

6. Sale Not in Accordance with Statutory Authority — Injunction. — Thus, where a railroad company was authorized by its charter to sell its road and franchises as an entirety, it was held that a proposed sale of the iron separately from the roadbed would be enjoined at the suit of the stockholders. Upson County R. Co. v. Sharman, 37 Ga. 644.

7. Consent of Stockholders. — Rogers v. Nashville, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A.) 91 Fed. Rep. 299; Young v. Toledo, etc., R. Co., 76 Mich. 485. And see generally the titles Stock; Stockholders.

A Majority of the Stockholders have the right to sell notwithstanding the objection of the others, provided the action of the majority was not fraudulent or oppressive. Waldoborough v. Knox, etc., R. Co., 84 Me. 469.

Notice of Stockholders' Meeting. — Shelby R. Co. v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 12 Bush (Ky.) 63.

Estoppel to Deny Validity of Sale. — Mahaska County R. Co. v. Des Moines Valley R. Co., 28 Iowa 437.

8. Filing Certificate of Sale. — In New York, etc., R. Co. v. New York, etc., R. Co., 52 Conn. 274, it was held that under a statute requiring a certificate of sale to be filed in the office of the secretary of state, and providing that title should vest on filing of such certificate, it was not necessary to record the transaction like an ordinary transfer of real estate.

grant thereof, either in express terms or by necessary implication.¹ It has been said, however, that this principle does not apply as to any surplus use that a railroad company may have in its property, but that it may make a contract for the disposition of such surplus use in any manner not inconsistent with the purposes of its creation.²

Even the Consent of All the Stockholders, it is said, will not authorize such a lease in the absence of an enabling statute.³

Effect of Unauthorized Lease.—A lease made by a railroad company without the authority either express or implied of an enabling statute is ultra vires and void,⁴ and therefore it cannot be validated by occupancy on the part of the lessee and the acceptance of rent by the lessor on the theory that these circumstances make it an executed contract so as to estop the parties to deny its validity,⁵ unless authority to lease was conferred after the lease was made, and the parties thereafter continued to recognize it as a subsisting contract.¹

Liability for Acts of Lessee. — Since a lease made without authority of law is void, the lessor is liable for the acts of the lessee in the operation of the railroad because the lessee, under such circumstances, is, in legal contemplation, the agent of the lessor.² The lessee also is liable.³ The fact that the lease is void does not prevent such liability from attaching.³

Forfeiture of Charter. — In case a railroad company leases its entire property and franchises to another company, such act constitutes an abandonment by the lessor of the operation of its road⁴ and subjects the lessor to forfeiture of its charter on the ground of nonuser.⁵

(2) Lease Authorized by Statute — (a) In General. — Authority to make or take leases is very frequently conferred on railroad companies by the legislature, either by the charter of particular companies or by general laws,⁶

Power to Make or Take Lease. — St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Terre Haute, etc., R. Co., 145 U. S. 393. Power to make a lease is not conferred by a provision in a railroad charter that the company may purchase, lease, or operate subject, however, as a general rule to certain limitations and restrictions.¹

(b) Implied Authority to Lease. — Ordinarily the authority in respect to leases is conferred in express terms by the enabling statutes, but in some instances it is implied.²

(c) Limitations and Restrictions — aa. CONTINUOUS OR CONNECTING LINES. — The statutes authorizing leases of railroad property and franchises are not ordinarily absolute and unrestricted, but they usually provide that a lease may be made when the roads of the lessor and lessee together form a continuous, connecting, or intersecting line,³ and this by implication is held to prohibit a lease to a parallel or competing line.⁴

"Continuous" Lines. — Two railroads are said to form a continuous line within the meaning of the statutes in question when there is a direct connection of their tracks and rails so that a train may pass from one to the other,⁵ while, on the other hand, the statutes have been construed as not requiring the passage of trains from one road to the other, but merely admitting the convenient interchange of passengers and cargo at the point of connection.⁶ It is not essential, however, that the leased line be an extension from either terminus of the lessee's road. The statutes permit a railroad company to take a lease any connecting railroad. Mills v. Central R. Co., 41 N. J. Eq. 1.

Power to Lease Held Dependent on Power to Build. — Camden, etc., R. Co. v. May's Landing, etc., R. Co., 48 N. J. L. 530.

1. See infra, this division of this section, Limitations and Restrictions.

2. Implied Power to Lease. — Gere v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 19 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 193; State v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 72 N. Car. 634; Hampe v. Pittsburg, etc., Traction Co., 165 Pa. St. 468. Thus, it has been held that giving authority to a certain corporation to lease the property of railroad companies gives the railroad companies implied authority to make leases of their property. Pinkerton v. Pennsylvania Traction Co., 193 Pa. St. 229.

Authority to Lease Not Implied. — Authority to lease is not implied from a general grant of power to contract. Troy, etc., R. Co. v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 86 N. Y. 107. Nor from a prohibition against consolidation with a parallel or competing line. Central, etc., R. Co. v. Morris, 68 Tex. 49. Nor from a provision authorizing a railroad company "to intersect, join, and unite with, and to make such contracts and agreements * * * for the use of its road as to the board of directors may seem proper," St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Terre Haute, etc., R. Co., 145 U. S. 393, following Pennsylvania R. Co. v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 118 U. S. 290; or providing that certain acts of the company shall be binding on "its successors and assigns," Briscoe v. Southern Kansas R. Co., 40 Fed. Rep. 273; or that the road may be operated "on such terms for the use thereof as the board of directors may prescribe," and that "they may make special contracts for special services," McCabe v. Maysville, etc., R. Co., (Ky. 1902) 66 S. W. Rep. 1054.

Power to Lease Not Implied from Power to Consolidate. — Mills v. Central R. Co., 41 N. J. Eq. 1.

3. Authority to Lease Connecting or Continuous Line — Indiana. — Eel River R. Co. v. State, 155 Ind. 433.

Kansas. — Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Fletcher, 35 Kan. 236.

New York. — Ogdensburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Vermont, etc., R. Co., (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 16 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 249.

Pennsylvania. — Van Steuben v. Central R. Co., 178 Pa. St. 367; Smith v. Reading City Pass. R. Co., 13 Pa. Co. Ct. 49, 2 Pa. Dist. 490.

The West Virginia statute authorizes railroad companies to lease their railroads "to corporations owning and operating any connecting line of railroad, whose line of road is completed or is in process of construction, wholly or partly within this or an adjoining state." It is held that under this statute the lessor must either own a railroad or must be in the bona fide operation of one under the authority of a lawful contract therefor. The mere fact that it was operating a connecting line without legal authority is not sufficient. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co. v. Howard, 14 App. Cas. (D. C.) 262, affirmed 178 U. S. 153.

4. Implied Prohibition Against Lease to Competing Line. — Eel River R. Co. v. State, 155 Ind. 433. See also the next following subdivision of this section, Parallel and Competing Lines.

5. Continuous Line Defined. — Black v. Delaware, etc., Canal Co., 22 N. J. Eq. 402, in which it was said that the word "continuous" implies without interval or interruption. See also State v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 24 Neb. 143, 8 Am. St. Rep. 164.

Successive Connections. — The statutory power is not exhausted by taking a lease of one road, but any number of roads may be leased in succession so long as they all together form a continuous route. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Fletcher, 35 Kan. 236.

6. Passage of Trains from One Road to Other Held Not Necessary. — Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Catawissa R. Co., 53 Pa. St. 20; Hampe v. Pittsburg, etc., Traction Co., 165 Pa. St. 468, reversing 41 Pittsb. Leg. J. N. S. (Pa.) 330.

of another road connecting with the lessee's line at any point; so that a continuous route is formed over the leased road to either terminus of the lessee's road.¹

"Connected" Lines. — The roads form a connected line when the connection is effected by means of an intervening road.²

bb. PARALLEL AND COMPETING LINES. — In addition to the prohibition of leases between parallel and competing lines, which is implied from the statutory permission to lease connected lines,³ leases of parallel and competing lines are, as a general rule, expressly forbidden by statute or by constitutional provision,⁴ though in some instances such leases have been permitted.⁵

Effect of Prohibited Lease. — In case such a lease is made, it is void ab initio and no action can be maintained on it. No performance on either side can give the unlawful contract any validity or be the foundation of any right of action.⁶

cc. RULE AS TO FOREIGN RAILROAD COMPANIES. — A statute which merely provides that railroad companies may lease the property of other companies refers to domestic corporations only, and does not authorize a lease to be made to a foreign company,⁷ unless the statute expressly applies to foreign as well as domestic companies.⁸ But this principle does not forbid a domestic company to take a lease from a foreign company, if the foreign company had authority to lease its property.⁹

Lease to Foreign Companies Expressly Forbidden. — In some jurisdictions leases to foreign companies are expressly prohibited without the consent of the legislature.¹⁰

dd. LEASES TO INDIVIDUALS. — It seems that a statute authorizing leases of railroad property and franchises contemplates leases to railroad companies only, and does not authorize the making of such a lease to one or more individuals.¹¹ It has been held, however, that such a lease is neither malum in se

Street Railways. — It is held that the provision of the constitution of Pennsylvania forbidding railroad companies to lease parallel or competing lines does not apply to street railways. Shipley v. Continental R. Co., 13 Phila. (Pa.) 129, 36 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 450.

Right to Build Parallel Line. — A prohibition against leasing a parallel or competing line does not forbid a railroad company, which has lawfully leased another road, from building a line parallel with it. Catawissa R. Co. v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 14 Pa. Co. Ct. 280.

What Constitutes Competing Lines. — For a discussion as to what constitutes competing lines, see supra, this title, Sales — Statutory Authority to Sell; and the title CONSOLIDATION OF CORPORATIONS, vol. 6, pp. 804, 826.

nor malum prohibitum nor void as against public policy, and that a lessee who has the possession and use of the property is estopped from denying its validity in an action for rent.¹

cc. LEASES AS AFFECTING PARTICULAR LOCALITIES. — A railroad company which has constructed its road by public aid is under the duty to operate its entire line to any locality which furnished such aid, and cannot lease a part of its line to another company to the injury of such locality.²

b. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY OF LEASES — (1) What Constitutes Lease. — It is not every instrument in the form of a lease that is such in legal effect, and conversely, an instrument may be a lease though it is not drawn in the appropriate form. Thus, an instrument which recites a letting of property and designates the parties as lessor and lessee has been variously held to be a mortgage;³ a partnership between the parties;⁴ a contract to operate the road as the agent⁵ or trustee of the owner;⁶ or a contract for a connection between the roads of the parties.⁷

The Requisites of Leases Generally are discussed elsewhere in this work.⁸

A Mere Vote by a Railroad Company to agree with another company to take a lease of its road and a vote by such other company to make the lease do not constitute a lease.⁹

Lease Distinguished from Contract for Joint Possession. — It has been held that a contract by which one railroad company permits another to use the road or a part of it jointly with the owner is not a lease.¹⁰

(2) Term of Lease. — In some jurisdictions, the term for which the lease of a railroad may be made is definitely limited by statute.¹¹ But in the absence of such a limitation, the validity of a lease is not affected by the period fixed for its duration,¹² even though the lease is for the full period of the lessor's corporate existence.¹³

Term Exceeding Period of Corporate Existence. — If the term of the lease exceeds the period of the lessor's corporate existence, it will still be valid for the period of such corporate existence.¹⁴

Effect of Holding Over. — Where the lessee of a railroad holds over after the

2. Leases as Affecting Particular Localities. — State v. Central Iowa R. Co., 71 Iowa 410, 60 Am. Rep. 806.

3. Instrument Construed as Mortgage. — Frank v. Denver, etc., R. Co., 23 Fed. Rep. 123.

4. Partnership and Not Lease. — Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Davis, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 468; Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Arispe, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 611. Compare Houston, etc., R. Co. v. McFadden, 91 Tex. 194.

Element of Partnership Wanting. — In South Carolina, etc., R. Co. v. Augusta Southern R. Co., 107 Ga. 164, it was held that a contract between two railroad companies by which one was to operate the other's road and the owner of the road was to receive a share of the profits was not a partnership, because there was to be no sharing of losses.

5. Contract to Operate Road as Agent. — South Carolina, etc., R. Co. v. Carolina, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A.) 93 Fed. Rep. 543.

6. Trustee. — U. S. Rolling Stock Co. v. Potter, 48 Iowa 56.

7. Contract for Connection. — Archer v. Terre Haute, etc., R. Co., 102 Ill. 493.

8. See the title LEASES, vol. 18, p. 597 et seq.

9. Vote to Agree to Take Lease Not Lease. — Peters v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 114 Mass. 127.

10. Joint Possession. — Coney Island, etc., R. Co. v. Brooklyn Cable Co., 53 Hun (N. Y.) 169. See also Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Union Pac. R. Co., 47 Fed. Rep. 15, affirmed (C. C. A.) 51 Fed. Rep. 309. But see contra, St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. East St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 39 Ill. App. 354, affirmed 139 Ill. 402.

11. Term of Lease Limited by Statute. — Thus, in New Hampshire it is provided by statute that no contract between two or more railroad corporations for the use of their roads shall be legal and binding for a longer term than five years. Currier v. Concord R. Corp., 48 N. H. 321. Compare the statutes in other jurisdictions.

12. Validity of Lease Not Affected by Length of Term. — Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. People, 153 Ill. 409, in which a lease to a company "and its successors and assigns forever" was held to be valid.

13. Lease for Period of Lessor's Corporate Existence. — Matter of New York, etc., R. Co., 35 Hun (N. Y.) 220.

14. Lease Exceeding Period of Lessor's Corporate Existence. — Gere v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 19 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 193; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A.) 51 Fed. Rep. 309, 10 U. S. App. 98.

Rule Against Perpetuities. — A lease to a railroad for a term of years, however long, does not violate the rule against perpetuities.²

Expiration of Term. — A railroad lease may be made determinable on the non-performance of its stipulations by either of the parties,³ or it may be terminated by the surrender of the lease, and the obligations of the lessee or one who assumed the lessee's obligations under the lease will terminate with such surrender.⁴

(3) Consent of Stockholders — (a) Requirements in General. — The statutes authorizing railroad companies to lease their property and franchises generally require the consent of the holders of a certain proportion of the stock before such lease can be made.⁵

Protection of Dissenting Stockholders. — Provision is sometimes made for the protection of the dissenting stockholders by requiring the lessee to purchase their shares.⁶

Term of Lease as Affecting Requirement. — In some jurisdictions, the consent of the stockholders is required only in case the lease exceeds a certain term.⁷

(b) Proportion of Consenting Stockholders. — Some of the statutes authorizing railroad companies to lease their property require the consent thereto of the holders of merely a majority of the stock,⁸ but in many instances the consent of a greater proportion is required.⁹

(c) Mode of Giving Consent. — The statutes usually require the consent of the stockholders to be given at a stockholders' meeting, either general or special,¹⁰ though it is sometimes provided that the consent may be given either at such meeting or by the stockholders individually in writing.¹¹

1. Holding Over — Tenancy from Year to Year. — Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 137 Ill. 9.

The General Rule is that a lease for a term of years, however long, or even a lease with a covenant for perpetual renewal, does not create a perpetuity. See the titles LEASES, vol. 18, p. 611; PERPETUITIES AND TRUSTS FOR ACCUMULATION, vol. 22, p. 706.

Formerly the consent of the stockholders was not required in New York, but such consent is now required in that state, Beveridge v. New York El. R. Co., 112 N. Y. 1; provided the term of the lease exceeds one year, Flynn v. Brooklyn City R. Co., 9 N. Y. App. Div. 269, affirmed 158 N. Y. 493.

6. Protection of Dissenting Stockholders. — Black v. Delaware, etc., Canal Co., 24 N. J. Eq. 455; Mills v. Central R. Co., 41 N. J. Eq. 1. And see the statutes of the several states.

7. Flynn v. Brooklyn City R. Co., 9 N. Y. App. Div. 269, affirmed 158 N. Y. 493.

8. Consent of Holders of Majority of Stock. — Boston, etc., R. Co. v. Graham, 179 Mass. 62; Humphreys v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 37 Fed. Rep. 307 (reciting the requirement of the Missouri statute).

9. Consent of More than Majority — Two-thirds. — Peters v. Lincoln, etc., R. Co., 2 McCrary (U. S.) 275 (reciting the Nebraska statute); Boston, etc., R. Co. v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 65 N. H. 393; Flynn v. Brooklyn City R. Co., 9 N. Y. App. Div. 269, affirmed 158 N. Y. 493.

Three-fourths. — Middletown v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 53 Conn. 351; Rogers v. Nashville, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A.) 91 Fed. Rep. 299 (reciting the Tennessee statute).

And see generally the statutes of the several states.

10. Consent to Be Obtained at Stockholders' Meeting. — Rogers v. Nashville, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A.) 91 Fed. Rep. 299; Peters v. Lincoln, etc., R. Co., 2 McCrary (U. S.) 275; Stevens v. Davison, 18 Gratt. (Va.) 819, 98 Am. Dec. 692.

11. Consent in Writing. — Humphreys v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 37 Fed. Rep. 307; St.

(d) Effect of Failure to Obtain Consent. — Though the statute, in terms, declares that any lease made without the consent of the stockholders "shall be null and void," it seems that such provision is for the protection of the stockholders alone and is intended to be availed of by them only; it does not limit the scope of the powers conferred on the corporation by law, but merely prescribes regulations as to the manner of exercising corporate powers. Therefore, the stockholders may waive compliance with the requirement, and such waiver is effected by long acquiescence in the lease.¹ The lessor company may also be estopped by lapse of time or otherwise to deny the validity of the lease,² and if the lessee company takes possession under the lease, a recovery may be had against it for the use of the property.³

(4) Reservation of Rent. — The lessee may lawfully stipulate to pay as rent an outstanding indebtedness of the lessor or the interest thereon.⁴

Amount of Rental. — A lease is not invalid merely because the rent reserved is so low that the preferred stockholders will absorb it all to the exclusion of the holders of the common stock.⁵

Rent Measured by Earnings. — Railroad leases sometimes stipulate for the payment by the lessee to the lessor of a percentage of the earnings of the leased road, either gross⁶ or net.⁷

c. OPERATION AND EFFECT OF LEASES — (1) As to Lessor — (a) Rights of Lessor. — The lessor's right to compensation for the use of the property demised is usually fixed by the terms of the lease.⁸ But a promise on the part of the lessee to pay for the use of the property will be implied in the absence of an express promise in the lease, in which case the lessor may recover a reasonable compensation.⁹

Forfeiture of Lease for Breach of Covenant. — The lessor has the right to sue for a forfeiture of the lease on the ground of breach of covenant, where the lease contains a provision for forfeiture in such case, unless there was a failure to declare a forfeiture when the breach occurred and the covenant was performed before a suit was commenced.¹⁰

Right to Extend Road. — The lessor does not, by making the lease, deprive itself of the right to avail itself of any powers conferred by its charter, so long as it does nothing to interfere with the due operation of its agreement with Covenant to Pay Percentage of Gross Earnings as Rent. — Terre Haute, etc., R. Co. v. Cox, (C. C. A.) 102 Fed. Rep. 825, holding that under a provision for the payment of a percentage of the gross earnings as rent, the lessee becomes chargeable in equity as a trustee for the lessor as soon as the earnings are received. But it has been held that a trust relation is not created by an agreement to pay to the lessor a portion of the net profits. South Carolina, etc., R. Co. v. Augusta Southern R. Co., 107 Ga. 164.

Exercise of Corporate Franchise. — A railroad company does not, by a lease of its road, deprive itself of its right to exercise its corporate franchise, except so far as the lease may operate to transfer such right to the lessee. Therefore, it may still condemn land by virtue of the power of eminent domain.²

(b) Liabilities of Lessor — aa. IN GENERAL. — It is well settled that a lease, though made pursuant to legislative authority, does not operate to relieve the lessor of any duty or liability imposed by its charter or by the general laws of the state, unless the enabling statute contains an exemption from liability.³

Construction and Maintenance of Road. — According to this principle, the lessor is liable for injuries caused by the nonperformance of its duty in regard to the proper construction and maintenance of the road, station buildings, etc.⁴

Failure to Fence Tracks. — And in those jurisdictions where railroad companies are under the legal duty of fencing their tracks, a company which has neglected to perform this duty is liable for injuries to animals which stray on the track, though it has leased the road to another company.⁵

Permitting Accumulation of Combustible Matter. — It is also generally held that the lease of a railroad does not relieve the lessor of liability for fires caused by the accumulation of combustible matter on the right of way, while the lessee is operating the road.⁶

bb. NEGLIGENT OPERATION BY LESSEE — (aa. Rule Holding Lessor Liable. — There is a sharp conflict of authority as to whether the lessor of a railroad is liable for injuries to person or property caused by the wrongful or negligent acts or omissions of the lessee in the operation of the road, as distinguished from the nonperformance of a duty which the lessor's charter or the general law imposes primarily on the lessor. There is one line of decisions holding that the proper operation of the road so as to avoid injury to third persons is one of the duties imposed by the charter of the proprietary company, and that it cannot escape such duty and the corresponding liability by leasing its road to another, but that the lessor is liable to any person who may be injured by the negligence or wrongful act of the lessee in operating the leased road, unless the charter or statute authorizing the lease exempts the lessor from such liability.¹ The theory of these cases is not that the lessee is to be regarded as the agent or servant of the lessor, but that public policy forbids a railroad company thus to divest itself of its legal responsibility without legislative authority.²

Assumption of Liability by Lessee. — The liability of the lessor is not affected by a covenant in the lease that the lessee will save the lessor harmless in respect to the operation of the road.³

A Statute Expressly Declaring the Lessee Liable for injuries inflicted in the operation of the leased road does not exempt the lessor from liability.⁴

Injuries to Lessee's Servants. — The rule of liability which has just been stated does not apply to the lessee's servants who may be injured by the lessee's negligence.⁵

(bb) Rule Denying Liability of Lessor. — Opposed to the rule just stated⁶ is a line of cases holding that legislative authority to lease a railroad implies an exemption of the lessor from liability for the acts of the lessee, and that when a company has leased its road and the lessee is in the exclusive possession and control under the lease, no liability attaches to the lessor for any negligent or wrongful conduct of the lessee or its servants, whereby third persons are injured.⁷

Possession Retained by Lessor. — But if the lessor retains possession and control of the road, that is, if the lease is merely a grant to the lessee to run its trains over the lessor's road, then, under such circumstances, the lessor is responsible for the lessee's negligence in the operation of its trains.¹

(cc) Statutes Governing Lessor's Liability. — In some states it is expressly provided by statute that the lessor of a railroad shall be liable for the acts of the lessee.²

(2) Rights and Liabilities of Lessee — (a) In General. — The rights of a lessee against and his liabilities to the lessor in any case must of necessity depend on the terms of the particular lease³ except so far as they are illegal,⁴ or have been waived by the lessor.⁵

Estoppel to Deny Lessor's Title. — The general rule that a lessee is not permitted to deny the lessor's title is applicable to a railroad lease, as well as in other cases.⁶

Estoppel to Deny Validity of Lease. — A railroad company having taken a lease of another road is estopped to deny the authority of the lessor's officers in the premises, or the regularity of the proceeding, where the lease was within the scope of the lessor's powers, was executed by the proper officers, and the lessee had taken possession under the lease and recognized it as subsisting.⁷

Obligation to Return Property in Good Repair. — The lease may fix the liability of the lessor in regard to the preservation of the property, as by a covenant that it shall be turned over to the lessor in good repair at the termination of the lease, in the absence of unavoidable casualty, legal proceedings, etc.¹

Obligation to Operate Leased Road. — A lessee may be required to continue the leased road in operation where the lessor's charter is subject to forfeiture in case the operation of its road is discontinued for a specified period.²

Subject to Lessor's Charter and General Provisions of Law. — The lessee of a railroad is subject to all the provisions and limitations of the lessor's charter,³ and also to the same general provisions of law which were applicable to the lessor.⁴

(b) Construction, Maintenance, and Operation of Road — In General. — It is held that the lessee of a railroad is not liable for injuries caused by defects in the original construction of the road where the injury results solely from the defect of construction and not from the operation of the road in its defective condition,⁵ unless the road as constructed constitutes a continuing injury to property⁶ or the construction is such as to be dangerous to the property of others, and the lessee, with knowledge of that fact, maintains the road in such condition.⁷ But it is the duty of the lessee company to see that the road is in a safe condition for the running of trains, and it is liable to any one who may be injured in consequence of the neglect of such duty.⁸

Duty of Lessee to Fence Track. — Therefore, if the leased road is not fenced as required by law, the lessee is liable where animals straying on the track are injured by the lessee's locomotives and cars,⁹ but the lessee is not liable where an animal was killed or injured before the making of the lease and while the road was still being operated by the lessor.¹⁰

Grade Crossings. — On the same principle the lessor's duty to abolish grade crossings devolves on the lessee, so that the lessee is liable for injuries sustained at such a crossing.¹¹

Maintenance of Nuisance. — The lessee is also liable where the leased road is so constructed as to constitute a nuisance.¹

Negligence in Operation of Road. — In the case of an injury caused by the negligence or wrongful conduct of the lessee in the operation of the road, the lessee is unquestionably liable to the person injured,² and in some instances this rule has been expressly declared by statute.³ The liability of the lessee in this respect for its own torts is not affected by the rule holding the lessor liable; but in the jurisdictions where such rule obtains the lessor and the lessee are jointly liable.⁴ And so, too, the lessee is liable for continuing to operate the road while it is in a defective condition, though there was no negligence in the running of the train on or by which the injury occurred.⁵

Subletting by Lessee. — In case of a subletting of the right to use the leased road, the lessee is liable for the negligence of the sublessee.⁶

(3) Rights and Liabilities of Stockholders. — A lease of a railroad pursuant to statutory authority does not release a subscriber to the capital stock of the company from liability on his subscription. He is charged with notice of the power.⁷ But if a lease is contrived for the purpose of defrauding the stockholders, or to pervert the franchises and property of the company to fraudulent or illegal uses, equity will interfere at the instance of the stockholders.⁸

d. ASSIGNMENT OF LEASES — What Constitutes Assignment of Lease. — An assignment of a lease is effected by any contract between the lessee and a third person by which the lessee transfers to such third person all the rights under the lease.⁹

Covenant Against Assignment. — A railroad lease may, by its terms, forbid the lessee to assign it without the consent of the lessor,¹ and unless the lessor ratifies the assignment,² an assignment in violation of such a covenant is a ground of forfeiture of the lease.³

Liabilities of Assignee. — Where a lease has been duly assigned, the assignee is bound by all the covenants therein which were binding on the lessee, including the obligation to pay rent.⁴

4. Consolidation. — The subject of consolidation of railroad companies has been fully discussed under another title in this work, to which reference is made in the note.⁵

X. CRIMES AND OFFENSES — 1. By Railroads — a. IN GENERAL. — The liability of railroad corporations under penal statutes and to indictment is the same as that of corporations generally. Of this question a full treatment is given elsewhere in this work.⁶

b. CRIMINAL LIABILITY FOR DEATH BY WRONGFUL ACT — (1) In General. — In some jurisdictions there have been statutory enactments providing for a fine to be recovered by indictment where the death of a passenger has been caused by reason of the negligence or carelessness of the proprietors of a railroad or their servants or agents, the fine to go to the surviving relatives.⁷ This provision has also been extended to include all persons other than employees, whether passengers or not.⁸

(2) Constitutionality of Statutes. — The constitutionality of such a provision has been upheld against the objections that it was an infringement of vested rights and a discrimination against railroads.⁹

(3) Nature of Proceeding. — The proceeding, though in the name of the state, is substantially a civil proceeding to recover damages, and is to be governed, as far as is practicable, by the same rules of evidence and principles of law which govern and are applicable to civil actions for damages.¹⁰

(4) When Prosecution Will Lie — (a) View that Death Must Be Immediate. — The view has been taken that the remedy by indictment is limited to cases where death results immediately, and that it does not apply where the death was not immediate, as, in the latter event, there is another remedy.¹¹

(b) Contrary View. — Other decisions do not, however, place this limitation upon the statute, but hold that its purpose is to impose a punishment upon the corporation as well as to secure compensation to the family of the deceased, and extend the remedy to cases where death does not result immediately.¹

(c) Degree of Negligence. — To render the railroad liable the negligence or carelessness of its servants or agents must have been gross, though in the case of the corporation itself gross negligence is not necessary.² In New Hampshire no distinction is made between the care required by the company and that required of the servants and agents.³

(d) Employees Not Included. — The provisions of these enactments do not include cases in which the person killed is an employee.⁴

(5) Who Is Liable — Proprietors. — The proprietors whom the statutes render liable to indictment are all common carriers, whether corporate or merely joint-stock companies.⁵ To render a corporation liable as a proprietor within the purview of the statutes it is not necessary that it should be proprietor de jure in every sense and for every legal purpose, but it is sufficient if it is proprietor in fact, having possession and control of the railway and operating it.⁶ Thus, the statute applies when the loss of life occurs upon a track not owned by the company or within the chartered limits of its own road, or of a road under its control, but upon a private track of which it is making a use reasonably incident to its business, though this use is upon the mere sufferance and license of the owner.⁷

Stockholders. — The individual stockholders cannot be indicted under this statute, but its application is limited to the corporation.⁸

(6) For Whom Fine Is Recoverable. — The fine being for the benefit of the persons designated by the statute, it would seem that it cannot be inflicted when there is no widow, child, heir, or other party, to whom, under the provisions of the statute, the amount recovered is to be given.⁹

Assignment of Interest in Action. — An assignment by an heir of his interest in the action has no bearing on the liability of the company, and it cannot claim an exemption on the ground of the invalidity of such an assignment and the assignee's inability to control the enforcement of the judgment or to receive the fine when collected.¹⁰

(7) Contributory Negligence. — In Maine and New Hampshire the company cannot be held liable if the contributory negligence of the deceased was the proximate cause of his injury.¹¹ By the Massachusetts statute,¹² the railroad becomes subject to the penalty for causing the death of a passenger even though he was wanting in the exercise of due care.¹³ But it was held under this statute that if the deceased passenger was killed while voluntarily leaving the train while it was in motion, no liability attached to the company, as upon his so doing he ceased to be a passenger.¹⁴ To render the company liable for the death of a person other than a passenger, the person killed must have been in the exercise of due care.¹

Negligence of Third Persons No Defense. — It is no defense that the improper conduct of third persons contributed to the death if the carrier was also at fault.²

(8) Effect of Limitation of Liability. — The railroad is not relieved from liability under the statute by conditions printed upon the back of the ticket, where it has been guilty of gross negligence and carelessness.³

(9) Limitation of Action. — An indictment under the statute does not come within the limitation imposed for the bringing of actions or suits for penalties or forfeitures of the penal statutes, but is controlled by the limitations fixed for indictments generally. Nor does a statute of limitation, enacted after the indictment has been found, alter the limitation, but it must be deemed to refer to future indictments.⁴

(10) Burden of Proof. — The burden of showing due care and diligence on the part of the persons killed is upon the state.⁵ This burden is sustained by proving facts and circumstances from which it may be fairly inferred. If there is a sufficient disclosure of facts, the mere absence of fault may be sufficient.⁶

(11) Amount of Recovery. — The amount of the fine to be imposed should be ascertained by the jury, subject, however, to the limitations fixed by the statute.⁷

c. FAILURE TO PROVIDE PRECAUTIONS AT CROSSINGS AND TO ERECT FENCES. — The liability of a railroad for failure to comply with provisions of statutes or ordinances in regard to precautions at crossings,⁸ and for failure to erect fences,⁹ will be found elsewhere in this work.

d. FAILURE TO REPAIR HIGHWAY. — A railway company which has laid its track in a public highway is liable to indictment for a failure to restore the highway in a reasonable time to as good a condition for travel as it was before.¹⁰

e. FAILURE TO REPAIR BRIDGE. — At common law¹¹ and under many statutes¹² railroads are indictable for failure to repair bridges which it is their duty to repair.

f. INDICTMENT FOR NUISANCES. — The liability of corporations generally to indictment for the creation and maintenance of nuisances has been discussed elsewhere in this work.¹³

h. VIOLATION OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT. — The criminal liability of railroads for acts in contravention of the interstate commerce act has been treated elsewhere.²

i. VIOLATION OF SUNDAY LAWS. — The question of the liability of railroads for the violation of statutes prohibiting the operation of certain classes of trains on Sunday is treated elsewhere in this work.³

2. Against Railroads — a. SHOOTING OR THROWING AT TRAIN. — Statutes have been enacted making it a criminal offense to shoot or throw a missile at locomotives or cars. The question whether the statute applies solely to cars in use,⁴ or includes cars not in actual use,⁵ depends upon the particular statute. To constitute a violation of the English statute it is necessary that the missile should be thrown against and strike an engine or car having a person upon it.⁶

b. OBSTRUCTING RAILROADS — (1) In General. — By statute in the larger number, if not all, of the jurisdictions, the obstruction of railroads is made a criminal offense.⁷ The purpose of these enactments is not merely to protect the company in the enjoyment of its property, but also to provide for the security and protection of the passengers and for the public safety and convenience.⁸

(2) To What Railroads Applicable. — The protection of the statute extends to all railroads in actual use, whether operated by a duly chartered corporation, or by a corporation de facto,⁹ or by individuals merely.¹⁰ Street railways are also included in its provisions.¹¹

(3) Nature of Obstruction — (a) In General. — While the exact nature of the obstruction prohibited depends largely upon the provisions of the particular statute, it is generally considered that an obstruction is created by the doing of any act, or the placing on the track of any object, or the removal of any part of the structure, which will endanger the life of those upon the train or interfere with or delay the operation of the road. Thus, it has been held to be an offense for a person standing on the track to delay a train by signalling it,¹² but not where a passenger on the train stops it by pulling the bell rope;¹³

to place an object on the track of such nature as to interfere with or delay the train;¹ to interfere with or remove signals or switch-lights;² to impair the track,³ or burn a bridge forming a part of the roadbed.⁴ But the removal of a fence not constituting any part of the roadbed proper is not a violation of the statute.⁵

(b) Actual Obstruction Not Necessary. — The offense does not consist in injury to the trains, track, or other property, but in placing the obstructions upon the track, or in doing the other acts whereby danger to life is caused;⁶ and a criminal liability may be incurred by placing the obstruction upon the track even though it was removed before it interfered with any train.⁷

(c) Size of Obstruction. — To render the offense complete it is enough that the obstruction was placed upon the track with the intent to obstruct the passage of the trains or to derail them, and it is not necessary that it should have been of sufficient size to accomplish this purpose, though this would be properly considered in determining the question of intent.⁸

(4) Intent — (a) In General. — Where the obstruction is purposely created a criminal liability exists even though no intent or design to cause the injury which would naturally result is shown, as the intent will be inferred from the quality of the act.⁹ But where the obstruction is caused purely through accident and without design, no criminal liability exists.¹⁰

(b) Obstruction for Purpose of Obtaining Reward. — That the purpose of the person placing the obstruction on the track, or tearing up the track, was not to cause a wreck but to signal the train, with a view to receiving a reward for his services, does not relieve him from criminal liability.¹¹

(5) Liability Where Death Results. — Where death results through the act of a person wilfully and intentionally placing an obstruction on or removing a portion of the track, he is guilty of murder or manslaughter, according to the circumstances, even though it is not shown that he was possessed of any malice toward the person killed, or had any special design against his life or that of any other person on the train.¹²

(6) Evidence — (a) Burden of Proof and Sufficiency of Evidence. — As in other criminal prosecutions, the burden of proving the guilt of the accused is upon the state.¹³ To show this mere suspicion of the guilt is insufficient. Nor can the guilt be inferred merely because the facts are consistent with guilt. They must be inconsistent with innocence.¹

(b) Evidence of Similar Acts. — Evidence that the accused placed on the track other obstructions than those charged in the indictment is admissible for showing the motive or intent on his part, where the acts are so closely connected that they may be considered as a part of the same transaction.²

(c) Testimony of Accomplice. — The complicity of a witness in and his conviction of this offense affects his credibility, not his competency.³ A conviction cannot be had, however, upon the testimony of an accomplice unless he is corroborated by such other evidence as tends to connect the defendant with the offense.⁴

(7) Former Acquittal. — That a person has been acquitted of the crime of wilfully obstructing a railroad does not prevent a new indictment being found against him in which the crime charged is the wilful doing of an act with intent to obstruct the railroad.⁵ Nor is an acquittal upon an indictment charging one with a felony in creating an obstruction with the intent to injure passengers or property a bar to an indictment under another section of the statute declaring the obstruction of a track to be a misdemeanor, where there is no intent to do an injury.⁶

c. TRAIN ROBBERY. — By statute it has been made a criminal offense to stop⁷ or board⁸ a train with intent to rob. These enactments have been declared to be constitutional.⁹

d. OFFENSES AS TO TICKETS AND FARES. — The questions relating to the forgery¹⁰ and the unauthorized sale of tickets, and other offenses connected with tickets, fares, and passes, are treated elsewhere in this work.¹¹

e. BURGLARY. — By statute, breaking and entering a railroad car,¹² depot,¹³ or office,¹⁴ with intent to commit a felony, constitutes a burglary.

I. MORTGAGES — 1. Power to Mortgage — a. IN ABSENCE OF STATUTORY AUTHORITY. — In pursuance of the general rule that a railway company, as a quasi-public corporation, has no power to transfer its corporate property so as to disable itself from performing the duties which it owes to the public,¹ it is also held that, as a mortgage may become an absolute conveyance by foreclosure, in the absence of express statutory authority a railway company has no power to mortgage its property essential to the operation of the road, such as its roadbed,² and a fortiori has no power to mortgage its franchise to operate a railway,³ nor its franchise to exist as a corporation so that any right so to exist may pass on a foreclosure of the mortgage.⁴ This implied restriction upon the power of a railway company to mortgage its franchise and property applies equally to street-railway companies.⁵

Minority Rule. — In a few jurisdictions the courts have upheld the power of a railway company to mortgage its franchise to operate a railway, together with its property, in the absence of express statutory authority, and have refused to recognize as sound the contention that to prevent the transfer of the powers and privileges conferred by a railroad franchise would be subversive of the public interests.⁶

Surplus Property. — A railway company has generally the power to sell and convey lands or other property not used for the operation of its road,⁷ and as a mortgage is in effect a quasi sale, it may mortgage such property.⁸

b. STATUTORY AUTHORITY TO MORTGAGE — (1) In General. — A railway company may, of course, mortgage its franchise and other property whenever there is legislative authority therefor, either in express terms or by reasonable implication.⁹ The legislature may also, by a curative act, render valid a

The mere fact that a mortgage by a railway company covers, in addition to property which it had the power to mortgage, other distinct property or franchises over which it had no such power, will not necessarily render the mortgage invalid in toto; it may be sustained as a valid mortgage of the property which the company had the power to mortgage. Hendee v. Pinkerton, 14 Allen (Mass.) 381.

railway company mortgage executed without original authority.¹

When Railway Companies Consolidate, the new company, having the rights and powers of the old companies, succeeds to their power to mortgage.²

Restrictions upon Power. — The power of a railway company to mortgage its property is, of course, subject to the restrictions thereon imposed by the statute conferring the power.³

(2) What May Be Included in Mortgage. — Where the statute conferring the power to mortgage expressly enumerates the property which may be included in the mortgage, it of course confers no power to include property not within the enumeration.⁴ A general power conferred upon a railway company to mortgage its railroad has been held to include the power to mortgage the franchise to operate the railroad, so as to enable the purchaser, on foreclosure of the mortgage, to continue its operation.⁵ But authority to mortgage franchises has been denied where the power was merely to mortgage real and personal estate;⁶ but even though this power did not include power to mortgage its franchises, still a mortgage covering the road, income, and other property, and also the franchise of the company, would be void only as regards the franchise.⁷ A railroad company with power to mortgage its property, franchises, etc., cannot include in the mortgage its franchise to act as a corporation, so as to confer on a purchaser under foreclosure sale the right so to act.⁸ It has been held that a railroad company cannot mortgage its income, rents, and profits under a power to mortgage its property and franchises.¹ When general power to mortgage the franchise and property of a railway company is conferred, a mortgage of a portion of the railway and franchise is authorized.²

Future-acquired Property. — A general power conferred upon a railway company to mortgage its property and franchises authorizes it to include in the mortgage future acquisitions of the company which constitute proper accessories to the railroad as an entirety, and which are essential to its proper operation.³

(3) Purpose for Which Mortgage May Be Executed. — Where the statute conferring the power to mortgage expressly designates for what purpose the power may be exercised, the railway company has no power to mortgage for a different purpose.⁴
